THE CHICAGO LEDGER

VOL. XXVII. NO. 15. CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1899. Single Copies 5 Cents.

THE RED MACHETE.

The Fair Conspirator of Porto Rico---A Secret League Oath-Bound to Freedom---Love, Wrong and Retribution.

By COLONEL PRENTISS INGRAHAM.

(Copyrighted 1898.)

[Note—Colonel Ingraham, author of the fascinating story which follows, held a position of high rank in the Sea and Land Patriot Service of the Cubans during "The Ten Years' War," and during his filibustering expeditions became familiar with Porto Rico and its people. Ingraham's life has been singularly eventful. A Southerner by birth, he took part in the War of the Rebellion as a Confederate officer, he then went to the Far East and espoused the cause of the Cretans against the Turks; afterwards he took part in the Abyssinian campaign. He also served with Juares against Maximilian in Mexico. Later he became the friend and comrade of Buffalo Bill, and met with many adventures on the western plains. Finally, after a most stormy and remarkable career, he married in New York, and settled down to authorship, drawing his material in great part from the magnificent storehouse of his experience. He is author of "A Story of Cuba," "The Cuban Patriot," "A Man in Grey," "A Prince of the Desert," "Montezuma," and other famous works.—The Editor.]

CHAPTER I.

A SPANIARD'S THREAT.

"Senor Colonel Delgarde, you must either yield your daughter's hand to me, or I swear I will destroy you body and soul!"

This fearful threat fell from the lips of a man in the uniform of a Spanish general, and the one he addressed was an American, tall, of distinguished appearance, a man whose age appeared to be about fifty.

The scene opens in a beautiful home in the outskirts of San Juan de Porto Rico, over which now floats the Stars and Stripes, but in a time not long gone by when Spanish rule crushed the brave people of the beautiful island.

At the words of the Spanish officer, the sun-browned face of the American flushed and then paled, while his eyes flashed with anger; but he said calmly:

"General Felipe Santa Sara, a year ago you did me the honor to ask for my daughter's hand; an honor as far as your rank and position go, and I declined, and for two reasons; first, you are above forty, she barely eighteen years of age; second, we Americans do not force our daughters to wed a man they do not love, and third, I would not wish her to marry a Spaniard, even were he a man of honor, which you are not. Today, my answer to you is the same as it was one year ago."

"This to me, Senor Americano!" and the Spaniard dropped his hand upon his sword hilt, and half drew the blade.

But the American did not move, and replied:

"Yes, and more to you if you force me to it, Senor Spaniard, for, though I am unarmed, I do not fear the sword of a coward, for I have been a soldier, as you know."

A bitter imprecation fell from the Spanish general's lips at the added insult of the American, but he restrained his evident desire to strike him down, and said:

"Yes, remember a soldier, a rebel against the United States government, after you had an easy berth in Porto Rico where you married a rich and beautiful woman, whose gold has kept you from starving."

"I was a rebel, yes, but I am not an exile, for the government of our land is not tyrannical and red-handed, as is yours, and I left my home because I met and loved a fair Porto Rican lady, to whom I rendered some service, and who was at school in New York. Though not rich, I had a fair living, and was so fortunate as to win for my wife the then Senorita Lucia Lamon, and thus made Porto Rico my home. Today, our child, Rosella, declines to accept you as a suitor and in her refusal her mother and myself heartily concur, and you, in your Spanish nature, seeking revenge, send for me to visit you here and threaten to destroy me, body and soul, unless I yield to your demand."

"You have stated the situation exactly, Colonel Delgarde, and you know just what to expect. I love your daughter; I am rich, hold high rank, and I ask her hand in marriage. Yield, and all will be well between us; refuse, and I have the power to crush you, body and soul, and I will do it."

"In what lies this power?" asked the American, impressed, in spite of himself, by the manner of the Spaniard.

General Felipe Santa Sara's answer was to walk quickly to a corner of the large room and unlock a massive desk that stood there. From an inner drawer, which he unlocked, he took a large envelope tied around with red tape. Holding up the envelope to the view of the American, he said, savagely:

"You ask for my power to do as I say, to crush you utterly, to destroy your good name here in Porto Rico, to wreck your honor and bring disgrace upon the woman you married, and on your beautiful daughter, and I tell you that I have in here, papers that do not lie, papers that will do all I assert and more—yes, the proof of what you have done, to bring down your proud head in shame to the dust."

Colonel Frank Delgarde heard the Spanish general's terrible words in perfect stillence. But his face had become livid, his eyes fairly blazed and he made a step toward the man who thus threatened him.

In alarm the general called out:

"Hold! Stand where you are, Senor Americano! Another step toward me and I will kill you, and well you know my reputation as a dead shot."

The steady hand of the Spaniard held a revolver, leveled, and that he would fire the American knew; but he said with an effort at self-control:

"That you are coward enough to shoot an unarmed man I know, and it would be madness for me to throw my life away, for I do know how true your aim is, and no more, I seek no hand to hand struggle with you; but I ask you again what papers you hold there?"

General Santa Sara replaced the envelope from whence he had taken it, yet still keeping his eyes upon the American, relocked the desk and replied, keeping at a safe distance:

"Your guilt tells you what they are; that they are the story of your crimes twenty years ago."

"It is false as your own heart, Felipe Santa Sara, for I have been guilty of no crime, no act, I am ashamed of."

"You do pretend."

"I so assert, and more, demand your proof."

"Openly?"

"Yes, before the world."

A malignant look crossed the dark, handsome face of the Spanish officer, and he said in a determined tone:

"You ask for a proof of your guilt, and you shall have it!"

There was a flash and the Spanish orderly fell dead.

CHAPTER II.

FACE TO FACE.

The American stood in silence waiting for the Spaniard to speak his next move, as he kept his eyes upon his face, as though he knew that no proof of a crime in his long career of adventure confronted him with power.

"From the first I believed you were a refugee in Porto Rico because you dared not live in your own country. But leaving your daughter——"

"And her wealth——"

"Granted, that I wished her wealth and beauty to go together; but I waived the fact that I believed her father a fugitive from justice, and sought her hand. I knew that her mother came from an old and honored Porto Rican family, that her father, his secret life not being known, was respected and admired here, and more, that the daughter was to be a grace my home in Madrid, and hence I wished to take her there, as soon as my mission here was ended. So it was that I asked of you her hand——"

"And fortune."

"Yes, and you refused."

"For reasons I have frankly made known to you."

"Too frankly, for they may send your neck to the garrote. Refused by you the honor I had offered her, declined by the Senorita Rosella, I grew revengeful and my desire to force you to terms, as I believed that I could do so, I at once set about my work, and you know well what the secret service of Spain is as a power behind the throne."

"Yes, a cruel, a merciless power for wrong."

"Right or wrong, innocent or guilty, none escape its iron hand once it is stretched forth to strike down unseen, and you have not been an exception. Senor Frank Delgarde, though in your case there was the corner stone of crime to build upon, was——"

"You lie in your coward heart and with your treacherous lips," cried the American.

The Spaniard again dropped his hand upon his sword hilt, but after a moment laughed sneeringly and continued:

"Wait and see who it is that lies, Senor; but, as I was saying, I put the secret service power of Spain at work, and it is as well established in your accursed country as elsewhere.

"I put the sleuthhounds upon your track, commencing at your boyhood home in Louisiana and pursuing you and your record through the civil war as a Confederate soldier."

"And boy or man, you found no stain upon my record!" proudly said Colonel Delgarde.

"I did, or rather, they did. I confess it was [illegible] but it was easy—like cradle-snatching.

The face of the American was unmovable in its hate, for every passion was dead but left it. Face, head and hands and throat as white as the snowy suit of linen that he wore.

"What found your minions against me?" he asked with an effort.

"The papers I held up to you were the proof that you were guilty of two great crimes."

"Name them."

"Your first crime was to desert a lovely girl whom you married, and your second crime was to rob your father-in-law of a large sum of money and escape from the country, to come to Puerto Rico, ostensibly to make wealth; yes, and to receive in your stolen wealth; yes, and to receive the lady whom you now claim is your wife, into a marriage with you, thus getting possession of her property."

Words cannot portray the malignant look and triumphant tone of General Santa Sara as he hurled this accusation, of double crime into the face of the American, whose daughter he sought to make his wife.

He had shown the basest nature, revenge for the one who had refused to allow him to have his own way; to force his garde to terms, he had spent large sums of the government's money, under pretense of tracking a conspirator against Spain, and had step by step fashioned the net in which Fenton Delgarde, for he had, from the first, suspected him of being a fugitive, from the United States.

The reports made to him by his spies were in the envelope he had opened and returned to the desk. With his assumed pose of crime complete, he stood before the counter of defiance in the teeth of the American.

Colonel Delgarde stood like one dazed by the charge brought against him. He put his hand to his head, and drew it across the brim down over his eyes as though to shield them.

This was his only movement, and there he stood like a statue and as white-faced as marble.

What passed through his mind, how his heart must have pierced Santa Sara could only guess; but he did not doubt but that to the end he would visit from fear of his displeasure becoming known and that he would tell him that he Santa Fara could have his daughter's hand and fortune as the price of silence.

For quite a minute the two stood facing each other, and then the American broke the silence.

"You have done your work well, General, through every side, as far as pounding on against me a lot of false charges; but they will have to be proven."

"Proof! I have the proof; yes, I have the record of your marriage certificate to the Senorita Rosa Crowley signed by her and by you, and the clergyman's attestive attached was enough to hang you higher."

"Dead!" and a ray of what seemed like hate flashed into the eyes of the accused man.

"Yes, he is dead, but his signature and those of the witnesses to your marriage are there."

"They are forgeries!" cried Delgarde, quickly, momentarily losing his splendid self-control.

"Yes, so you assert, but they are genuine as you will find out, as are also the proofs of your having robbed the bank of the father of the girl you married and deserted."

"All these charges are as false as the lives of the men who affirm them."

"Which you say you were married."

"I most emphatically do, for my engagement to her was made on the very day we were to be married; yes, at the very hour appointed for the ceremony and when all arrangements were made. Why I broke the engagement only she in her own self knows, but her path in life and mine separated on that day; in fact, I do not know whether she is still living or dead—perhaps you, Sir Spy, can tell me, for from this time on she will be to me as—"

"Spare Delgarde, I do know that your real wife is dead, she is here to dine the life into your teeth."

"Dead, Delgarde, dead!"

With the last call of the Spanish general there was heard a quick step approaching from the inner room, and into the presence of the two men swept a woman.

One glance at her face, which he had not seen her in twenty years, Colonel Delgarde recognized the woman whom the Spaniard had charged with his deserted wife.

A cry broke from his line at sight of her and he placed his hand upon the back of a chair, as if for support, while he said in a low tone:

"Bertha, are you here to accuse me?"

"I am!" was the firm and fluttered response.

CHAPTER III.

IN THIS, PUBLIC.

As though from the grave the woman, Bertha Crosby, Delgarde, or whatever her name should be, had appeared upon the astounded vision of Colonel Frank Delgarde.

If he had doubted what the papers, held by General Santa Sara had proved against him, he could not doubt the testimony of his own eyes.

Here was the woman whom twenty years before he had admitted he had expected to make his wife, now, conjured up as by magic, as his accuser.

She was a handsome woman, scarcely looking her age of forty years, and she was becomingly attired. Her face was a study for in it was no sign of triumph, none of sympathy. Upon the wedding finger the eyes of Delgarde saw a heavy gold band, a wedding ring.

"Be seated, Senora Delgarde," said General Santa Sara in good English.

She obeyed in silence.

Then the general said and he could ill suppress his triumph:

"Now, Senor Delgarde, I believe we can come to terms."

The American bowed in silence.

"You know my desire, and the trouble and expense I have been to proves my earnestness. I have here double proof of the crimes with which I charge you. I have no feeling personally against you for love your daughter, and wish to make her my wife. Do you understand, Senor?"

"Perfectly."

"My spies found for me this lady, your real wife; but twenty years is a long time, and as you deserted her in the long ago, she has no claim to lay claim to you, and more, her heart is too tender to wish to bring sorrow upon the innocent woman, who, in Porto Rico, bears your name, the innocent and beautiful girl, the Senorita Rosalia. I have talked with the lady here, your wife, for she came at my wish, and she is content to return to her American home without charging you with your crime against her, so long as you obey my will.

"If you give to me the hand of your daughter all will be well, and your dread secret shall be as though buried in the grave. If you refuse me, she will make her claim and the blow falls heavily upon the innocent and the guilty."

"You know just what to expect now and it rests with you; but should you decide in my favor, then, as this lady, your wife, informs me that she is a poor woman, I deem it but right that you pay her a small sum of money sufficient to make her comfortable. I await your reply, Colonel Delgarde."

The Spanish general seated himself as he spoke, and motioned the American to a chair. The latter remained standing, and, turning his eyes full upon the woman, he asked:

"May I inquire if you are still Miss Bertha Crosby?"

"I am not now so known, for, believing you dead, as was reported, I married."

"You married Anthony Breslin, of course?"

The woman's pale face flushed, and she replied:

"I did marry Anthony Breslin."

"Is he living or dead?"

"Dead."

"Then you go as his widow?"

"I am so known."

"And in poor circumstances?"

"Yes."

"You were the sole heir of your rich father?"

"My father failed and my expected inheritance was swept from me."

"If you are in distress I am willing to aid you financially."

"I have not asked you for aid, though General Santa Sara has done so for me."

"May I ask what has come here of your own free will?"

"I did, when I was told that I could do great good by coming."

"The hope of pecuniary recompense did not suggest your motive?"

"It did not."

"And you came here as my accuser?"

"I did."

"And of what do you accuse me?"

"Of making me your wife and then deserting me."

"Would you assert this under oath?"

"I would."

"Then I am indeed in the toils of those who would destroy me, body and soul," cried Colonel Delgarde, and a hunted look came into his eyes while his lips quivered with an emotion that nearly burst the bonds of restraint.

Quickly Delgarde walked to and fro, half a dozen times across the room, the Spaniard and the woman watching him; then halting before the one who had thus accused him, he asked quietly:

"Have you other accusations to make?"

"The one I am most interested in is that I have made, that before God and man, I am your wife."

"I have no love for you, no wish to force my claim, so long as I love by you, and I only do so in behalf of others; but did I wish to accuse you of another crime I could readily prove that you robbed my father's bank of a large sum, after deserting me, and fled, and I alone kept you from being brought back to suffer punishment for your crime."

"As you accuse me of having married you and then deserted you, I do not wonder that you also make me out a bank robber; but I am to understand that, for a consideration, a liberal one, you are willing to return to America, leaving the charges against me unpressed?"

"I am poor, dependent upon my own hands for a living, and General Santa Sara thinks I should have a liberal sum from you."

The American then turned to the Spaniard and said sternly:

"I have your terms, Senor, and this woman, so I now have what to expect; but I demand two days to consider what I shall do. When the time is up I will meet you here, prepared to act."

"You are wise, Sir; I will give you the time—until day after tomorrow noon."

With a bow in reply, Delgarde left the villa.

CHAPTER IV.

THE DEATH SHOT.

Mounting his waiting horse, Colonel Delgarde rode slowly away from the villa, which was General Santa Sara's headquarters. He was almost crushed by the blow that had fallen upon him, and he rode along with a stern face and eyes bent down, unheeding the courteous greetings of those whom he met.

At last he halted, after a ride of several miles, at the entrance to a handsome villa, surrounded by a large and well tilled estate. The grounds were beautiful, filled with ornamental trees, and the white villa, surrounded by an colonnaded piazza, was a very fine structure, the home of wealth and refinement.

Here he had lived a happy life with his loving wife and beautiful daughter. Now, upon that grand home a cloud rested, a storm of sorrow and despair seemed about to break. But his face grew lighter as he rode up to the villa, and from his lips came the scarcely uttered words:

"I will confess all to them. They shall know the truth!"

He dismounted, a native servant taking his horse, and upon the shady side of the piazza he saw his wife and daughter, the

Spring Humors of the Blood

Are Cured by

Hood's Sarsaparilla

It doesn't make any difference whether you believe in the modern theory and speak of the cause of diseases as referable to germs, microbes or bacilli, or whether you use the older and better understood terms of "humors" and "blood diseases"—Hood's Sarsaparilla cures them all JUST THE SAME. It cures those eruptions, boils and pimples which are so likely to appear in the Spring; cures scrofulous diseases in their most tenacious forms; cures salt rheum or eczema and relieves the dreadful itching and burning; cures all stomach troubles due to generally weak condition and thin, anemic blood; cures debility and that tired feeling, which just as surely indicate that the blood is lacking in vitality and the elements of health. This is not merely modern theory but it is solid, up-to-date fact. You undoubtedly need a good Spring Medicine. Get Hood's Sarsaparilla today.

Pimples.—"Headaches, nose bleed and pimples made me so weak that I could not walk. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me good sleep, strength, and cured me." Arthur M. Ehrestuer, 191 West Fayette-st., Syracuse, New York.

Pure Blood.—"My work was formerly a burden but now it is a pleasure, and all because Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me new, pure blood. I now have good color and eat with a relish." Mrs. Alfred A. Howard, 36 Summer-st., Taunton, Mass.

Consumption Cough.—"Five years ago I had a consumptive cough which reduced me to a skeleton. Was advised to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. It did, and recovered normal health. I have been well ever since." Mrs. Bridgeman, corner Pearl and Chestnut-sts., Jeffersonville, Ind.

Leg Sores.—"Sores on my wife's limb were so bad she could walk. Physicians said all no value and she used crutches. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla she laid them aside and walked freely." Fred A. Horn, Reynolds Bridge, Conn.

Poor Health.—"I never saw anything that my sons Hood's Sarsaparilla lifted me up. It sharpened my appetite and gave me a new lease of life. I can say very truly." Freeman N. Bixby, Meredith, N. H.

Scrofula.—"My wife was afflicted with scrofula for fifteen years. Some farmers' Hood's Sarsaparilla. Her skin was rough, itching and burning. Six bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla worked a complete cure." M. E. Stevens, Charlotte Center, New York.

Sore Sores.—"I am a wounded veteran of the civil war. I get all run down by spring time and not able to work. Hood's Sarsaparilla always cures me. My wife praises it for curing nervousness and rheumatism." E. H. Robinson, Canton, Conn.

Asthma.—"I was troubled with asthma for many years. Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills have availed until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which completely cured me. Many others friends of my cure used Hood's." C. L. Hoskins, Etna, O.

Rheumatism.—"My husband has been greatly benefited by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for rheumatism. I take it when weak and feel worn out, and it does me good." Mrs. M. Leddy, 526 Waverly-av, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Catarrh.—"I was a sufferer from catarrh of the worst form. I could not use Ely's or great distress. I tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, felt better, continued to gain and have been greatly benefited." Mrs. E. R. Plummer, 235 Union-av., Lacoma, N. H.

Weakness.—"I bless the day I heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was in a state of extreme weakness after grip, built my husband up after pneumonia, cured eczema and blood poisoning in our children." Mrs. M. A. Dilworth, Box 4, Embreville, Pa.

Rheumatism.—"A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla entirely cured my sufferings from rheumatism. Later on is stopped dyspepsia, from which I suffered intensely. I can eat anything now." Wm. A. Buckley, 366 Somerset-st., East Boston, Mass.

Catarrh.—"Many years' suffering from catarrh makes me appreciate Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has given me indigestion and kidney trouble. It gave me strength and good appetite." Mrs. O. J. Phillips, Fountain, Md.

Liver and Kidneys.—"My mother was very sick with congestion of the liver and kidney trouble. Nothing helped her until we got Hood's Sarsaparilla, which showed its effects from the first dose. She is well and hearty." Mrs. L. A. Stone, Winthrop, Me.

Sick Headache.—"For years I tried different medicines for my sick headaches. Found no relief until I used Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is marvelous in its cures." Mrs. Henry Miller, 529 Leonard-st., Dundrick, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Never Disappoints

It is the Best Medicine Money Can Buy former in a hammock, the latter seated near and reading to her.

The Senora Delgarde still retained the handsome face and form that had won the heart of the American nineteen years before. They had met upon a sailing vessel on which she was with her father, returning from boarding school in the United States, and he was a passenger en route to Porto Rico. A collision at night, a sinking ship, the splendid pluck of the American, which had saved her life, her father's, and the lives of many, had begun the acquaintance which ripened into love, and ended after a year in the marriage of Senorita Lucia Lamon and Colonel Frank Delgarde.

The only child of this union had been Rozella, at the opening of this story, a lovely girl of seventeen. Well educated and speaking English as well as Spanish, she won the hearts of all who knew her, General Santa Sara being her most persistent suitor.

Laying aside her book as her father approached, Senorita Rozella came and welcomed him, while his wife said:

"You look tired, yes, really ill, Frank—are you ill?"

"At heart, yes; and I will tell you why, for I have just had a scene with General Santa Sara."

"And all about poor little me," ruefully said Senorita Rozella.

"In part, yes; but I wish to tell you and your mother a strange story, my daughter. I will tell you the whole truth, from the long ago up to the scene in the home of Santa Sara, and you will judge what it is best for me to do."

They were very serious now, for they knew that something had happened to deeply move the husband and father, and, rising from her hammock, the Senora said:

"I fear you have had some great trouble, Frank, and Rozella and myself will do all we can to cheer you up."

She spoke in English, for in their home life they seldom addressed each other in Spanish.

Taking a seat where he could look both his wife and daughter in the face, and note the impression of his words upon them, Colonel Delgarde began the long story he had to tell, and it was a painful one to come from his lips.

There was an expression deeply anxious upon the face of mother and daughter as they listened, while the two talked on, and only at the end awaited their judgment, with much the look an a prisoner on trial for his life might wear while awaiting the verdict of a jury who held his fate in their hands.

"Father, face the ordeal, for I have no fear what the end will bring," cried Rozella, in her impulsive way, as she threw her arms around her father's neck and kissed him.

"God bless you, my child," and he turned toward his wife.

"Frank, stand firm, come what may, for my whole trust is in you today, as it has ever been."

The strong man buried his face in his hands, and his whole form quivered with emotion. Then he said, suddenly:

"The woman wants gold and can be bought; but those papers, though forgeries, I must have."

And this resolve burned itself into heart and brain, and would not down. He had decided that the papers held by General Santa Sara he would have, and then, with the woman's silence bought, he need have no dread of what the Spaniard might do.

"I must see her, and this night, and at the same time secure those papers at any cost."

So he said and his mind was made up, his plan of action formed and when night came he acted.

Any one seeing him ride away from his home that night would have never recognized, in the clever disguise he wore, as a Spanish cavalry officer and with a false beard covering his face, the American planter, Colonel Delgarde.

He knew the grounds of the general's villa well, and the house as well, for often he had been a guest there when the two were friends, and he knew also that at that hour Santa Sara would be at the Spanish club in San Juan, while, at his home, the woman would be alone, leaving his horse hidden in the shrubbery, he approached the villa unseen and saw no one. He entered the room, where he had, a few hours before, heard his alternative pronounced by General Santa Sara for him to act upon.

No one was there and it was dimly lighted. He approached the desk that held the coveted papers.

He had come prepared for action, stopping at a locksmith's and securing for a liberal bribe, a bunch of skeleton keys. A moment's trial found one to open the lock and the heavy desk lid was opened. Another key opened the inner compartment.

There was the large envelope, tied with red tape.

He seized it and thrust it into his pocket. As he did so there was a shriek behind him.

It was the woman he had hoped to find, and he sprung toward her.

But she shrieked wildly and cried:

"Help! Help! Robbers, murderers, are here!"

The cry was in English, not understood in that household.

But it was heard and brought to the scene a huge Spanish soldier, General Santa Sara's orderly and confidential valet, a man hated by all who knew his overbearing, cruel ways.

He sprung toward Colonel Delgarde with sword uplifted to cut him down, unheeding the fact that he saw before him, as he believed, a Spanish officer, knowing only that his master's desk had been opened and before him was the robber.

Another second and he would have cut the American down, but in self-defense Delgarde acted, and just in time. There was a flash, a report, and the Spanish orderly fell dead.

At the same instant there came into the room General Santa Sara and half a dozen soldiers.

This thrilling story will be continued next week. See the Ledger's liberal subscription offer on page thirteen.

THE DEAREST EYES.

By Ella Martin.

Dear serious eyes of brown,
They haunt me so!
They come to me from out the past,
And o'er my soul their spell is cast—
They flee not at my frown,
But on me glow!

Dear kindly eyes of blue,
On me they beam!
I love to reverie to see
The light that they have shed for me—
These gentle eyes so true,
Sweet as a dream!

Dear loving eyes of gray,
The others flee,
And broken is their magic spell,
When tender eyes I love so well
Plead silently to stay.
They dwell with me!

Queen Victoria's Fads.

Queen Victoria dislikes cold meat, suede gloves, artificial flowers and the odor of furs.

Her alias, when she finds it advisable to use an incognito, is either the Countess of Balmoral or the Duchess of Lancaster. The latter is one of her numerous titles.

The queen is the possessor of one of the best-toned pianos in the world—it is a magnificent Georgiana, made of Amboyna wood. There are in all sixty pianos in her various palaces.

Where members of the queen's family or any German relatives visit London and occupy Buckingham palace, "by invitation," they pay their board just like common folks in a first-class hotel.

"Queen's bounty" costs Victoria on an average $1,500 a year. The queen, when she sent three sovereigns to a mother who had given birth to three children forty years ago, probably did not foresee to what vital dimensions the "bounty" would grow.

Her majesty was recently presented with $100 by an Indian chief of British Columbia, doubtless as a thank offering for the $5,000 he recently received for the 60,000 fish he had caught and sold. The queen acknowledged the gift by letter, accompanied by an engraving of herself and two pleats of sheep's wool.

There is said to be only one man who has ever dared to make a joke in the presence of the queen of England. This was Canon Shore, an Irishman, and one time tutor in the royal family. Discussing the infidelity and heterodoxy of shoemakers as a class, he said "one could hardly expect a shoemaker to believe in the immortality of the soul (soul)." Her majesty enjoyed the joke and laughed heartily over it.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY
Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. 25 cents. The genuine has L. B. Q. on each tablet.

Vain Regrets.

Mrs. Gadabout—Our new servant is a jewel. She cooks beautifully, is very economical, never goes out and never talks back.

Her Husband—I wish I had met her before I was married.

Pleasant Day.

"When I get a good breakfast I feel well started for the day."

"How?"

"Then if I had a nice luncheon down town and a good dinner at night I go to bed cheerfully."

Beauty's Guard

Sweet faces become careworn.
Gentle dispositions grow harsh.
Plump figures lose their comeliness.
Irregular, painful or excessive menstruation is Nature's warning of trouble ahead.

No woman suffering from diseased generative organs can long retain her beauty.

Do not throw away nature's gifts by neglect. Consult Mrs. Pinkham, write her at Lynn, Mass., and get her advice free.

Miss Jole Saul, Dover, Clare Co., Mich., writes:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—A year ago I was a great sufferer from painful menstruation. I could not lie down or sit down for the dreadful pain each month. I wrote to you and took twelve bottles of your Vegetable Compound, and it has helped me so I cannot express my feelings toward Mrs. Pinkham. I am today well and hearty."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a woman's remedy for women's ills. It is the most efficient safeguard against disease of the feminine organs known to medicine. More than a million women have been helped by it

Mrs. Lizzie Coleman, of Wayland, New York, writes:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—For years I suffered with painful menstruation and falling of the womb. The bearing-down pains in my back and hips were dreadful. I could not stand for more than five minutes at a time when menstruation began But thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my sufferings are now a thing of the past. I shall gladly recommend your medicines to all my friends."

Beauty should be preserved as well as health. Perfect health is the guard of beauty. Be wise in time. Mrs. Pinkham will advise you confidentially and without charge.

Mrs. Brown's Earnest Letter.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I must tell you that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than any doctor. I was troubled with irregular menstruation. Last summer I began the use of your Vegetable Compound, and after taking two bottles, I have been regular every month since. I recommend your medicine to all I can."—Mrs. Maggie Brown, West Pt. Pleasant, N. J.

"Entirely Cured by Mrs. Pinkham."

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham—After following the directions given in your kind letter for the treatment of leucorrhœa, I have been entirely cured by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies, and will gladly recommend them to my friends. Thanking you for your kindness, I am gratefully yours, A. B. Davids, Binghamton, N. Y."

Ask Mrs. Pinkham's Advice---A Woman Best Understands a Woman's Ills.

A MARVELOUS WOMAN.

The Strange Story of the Scarlet Masks---Love and Hate Entwined--The Dramatic Sequence of a Great Sin.

By EMMA HOWARD WIGHT.

[Copyrighted 1899, all rights reserved.]

SYNOPSIS.

Gaspard and Helene de Fontenelle, twins and sons of a noble house, dwell in the village of Beaumont, are on their twenty-first birthday receive a letter from their father, Armande Pedro Calderon de Kercheval, telling them to come to Paris at once. They travel by night, arrive late in the morning, meet Jessa, with Pedro, and come to an old castle, the hidden seat of a band of robbers known as the Scarlet Masks. They find that their father is chief of the robbers and wishes that his commands Gaspard to take his place as chief and to avenge the wrongs done his father and mother. He tells his children that he is dying, that he had lived as Armande de Kercheval, whose son, a dissolute fellow, had married Helene de Fontenelle, and had left a son and daughter. Having him cheated Gaspard's father of his estate and title of de Fontenelle, but the lady died of grief, joined the Scarlet Masks and in time became their chief. Gaspard becomes the chief of the Scarlet Masks. Helene remains to aid him. Pedro tells you how the Count de Kercheval, now growing old, has returned after twenty years to Paris with his only beautiful daughter Marguerite in with him. He also tells how Gaspard, as the Scarlet Mask, will soon visit his father and receive the commands of the Count de Kercheval. Gaspard, to avenge his wrongs, disguised, having the aid of his band, goes to the Kercheval mansion, kills two of the bandits he is to wait for Armande, but decides it did not suit his purpose. Helene then became chief of the Scarlet Masks and disguised, she, Gaspard and her brother's death. Old Mad. Jude Sir Henry Landis follow the Count de Kercheval's duel, and the estranged son and father come to the house of Pedro. The de Kercheval have the Scarlet Masks captured, and Gaspard, as the Scarlet Mask captain, imprisons him in the cellar of the castle and dressed in his clothes and with his carriage she goes to the ball and chateau, and afterward she calls on the de Kercheval's at the St. Marr and makes love to Marguerite. Charles de Kercheval is startled to marry Helene, the adventuress of Maur, as he himself has squandered his son and Marguerite's patrimony, and they decide to come into the twenty-fifth to Marguerite. Helene, Scarlet Mask, resolves to love Marguerite. They become engaged and Gaspard, as the Scarlet Mask, decides to kill Charles de Kercheval, but Helene begs him to spare his life, and he has married the latter. Helene tells Gaspard that he is in love with her, but they suffer shame. Helene goes to Paris as a young heiress and Armande finds and falls in love with Helene. Knowing that as a man she has married his father, Armande proposes to Helene and is accepted. Pedro comes to Paris insanely jealous and tells Helene. Helene is endowed her purpose of revenge. She tells Pedro to wait and she will get Armande to her bidding. She tells Marguerite that he loves her, but that she has married the head Helene tells Marguerite that she is in love with her husband's father and that she will win him in the wedding day to wed. The day of Armande's marriage to Helene arrives. She herself had fallen in love with the handsome man she had deserted when she left the Pontenelle's wrongs might be revenged.

CHAPTER XX--(Continued.)

A little later Hortense, enveloped in a long, cloak, stole out of the house. She walked rapidly along the path to the lovers' concealing the entrance to the retreat. She swung this aside, passed through and replaced it. Then she made her way to a small shed in the forest where the bandits always kept two horses to be used in case of emergency. Bridle and saddle hung in the shed. These Hortense quickly put upon one of the horses, mounted and gaining the road which wound through the forest, sped swiftly away in the moonlight.

CHAPTER XXI.

Helene was standing beside the graves of her father and Gaspard. For some little time she stood motionless with the pale face radiance of the moon upon her face, which seemed marble white against the midnight blackness of her hair.

At length she turned slowly away. As she turned out of the mourners a man in the old form came forward and stood in her path. It was Pedro. Pedro was pale and agitated, determined, and eyes all alight with passion.

Helene lifted her eyes and looked at him steadily. She drew her graceful figure a little more erect and waited in silence for him to speak.

"Helene," he said, hoarsely, "the time has come for me to speak. The love I bear you seems consuming me very soul. You must have seen that I love you. God! I loved you from the first moment my eyes rested upon you."

"I have not been blind to your feelings for myself," she replied, quietly, and an anguished rage smote the man's soul as he saw how powerless he was to move her. "I regret having inspired such feelings, which, from the first, you must have seen could never be reciprocated by me."

"A man does not reason in that way when he loves a woman as I do you," he cried. "He must hope or go mad. I know you do not love me now, but all I ask is a chance to teach you to care for me. I am a great strong man, but my love for you has so entwined itself about every fiber of my body that my very soul grows sick at the very thought of not winning you for my own," and he caught her hands, grasping them so fiercely that he bruised her flesh, while he bent over her with wild eyes which would have struck terror to the hearts of most women.

But Helene de Fontenelle had never known the meaning of the word fear and she met Pedro's eyes with a haughty frown and said, coldly:

"Release my hands, if you please, you are hurting me."

He dropped her hands and drew back. He realized for the moment by her coldness and the indomitable will which had never failed to overcome him.

"Let us end this matter now and forever," she continued. "You have been kind to me ever since I first came to this place, and I am sorry to cause you pain, but you must know that it is impossible. I do not love you. I never could love you, therefore, all your efforts will be of no avail, resulting in my heart would be utterly futile."

He did not speak for a moment, passionately. You shall not take from me hope, drive me to despair. When I saw you in the moonlight you seemed to me a spirit that had loved him, and my brain was on fire. I did not know until later how consummately a woman can feign a love when she wishes to take advantage of a man's weakness and I could hardly restrain myself from rushing upon him and striking him dead. Then I felt your lips upon mine, and I could hardly restrain myself from rushing upon him and striking him dead. Then I felt your lips upon mine, and the warmth of your kisses still lingered on them. But I was wrong, I know now that you did not feign to me.

"How do you know this?" asked Helene, with a sweet voice, and you would never have sent him from you had you loved him. You don't know until later how consummately a woman can feign a love when she wishes to take advantage of a man's weakness and I could hardly restrain myself from rushing upon him and striking him dead. Then I felt your lips upon mine, and the warmth of your kisses still lingered on them. But I was wrong, I know now that you did not feign to me.

"How do you know this?" asked Helene, with a sweet voice, and you would never have sent him from you had you loved him. You don't know until later how you know full well the strength of your will, but a woman is weak when she loves. You said me that you would still carry out your plan of vengeance even if you loved Armande de Kercheval. Is that not believe you, for, God! I know her far stronger than all else is love. Nothing on earth I would not do to win you. I would pass through fire and blood to hold you in my arms for one moment, to kiss your lips but once. Have pity on me," and he fell at his knees and with her feet and clutched her dress with his hands.

His white face upon which great drops of sweat glistened in the moonlight, was upturned to hers. She looked down upon him with something like pity in her beautiful, tired eyes.

"I have no pity to me," she said. "The sight of a man's face, the sound of a man's voice will never cause me a thrill of heart-quicker, for that heart lies in my breast like a dead thing. It died at Beaumont when I made Armande de Kercheval farewell forever."

He started, his head fell further with a snap, while through them came a sound which was half a moan and half a curse. Then he drew himself to his feet, bent over her and his hands clutched her throat. She looked up steadily into his face, horrible with its distorted features and glaring eyes. There was not a shadow of fear in her own.

"I do not value my life very highly," she said, quietly, "but I think you will be sorry later if you commit such a coward's act."

His hands fell from her throat. He stood before her trembling and quivering through all his powerful frame.

"Go," he muttered, hoarsely, "you have driven me mad. Go, lest the temptation to kill you, to thrust out of existence the beauty which can never be mine grow too strong for me."

She gave him a grave, steady look, in which was mingled pity and a tinge of contempt. Pity, for she knew the fierce nature of the man and how dreadfully he suffered; contempt, that he possessed not the will to control himself better. Then she turned and walked slowly towards the castle.

CHAPTER XXII.

"Monsieur Armande, there is a woman below who desires to speak with you."

Armande de Kercheval, sitting beside his father's bed, turned with a surprised look in his haggard eyes.

"A woman at this hour of the night," he exclaimed. "Who is she and what is her business?"

"That I do not know, monsieur," replied the servant. "She said nothing, save that she wished to see you and that her business was important."

"Very well, I will see her," said Armande as he rose.

The straining eyes of the Count de Kercheval, burning in the still pallor of his face, followed his son as he moved towards the door.

"Tell Jean to come and sit with my father," said the latter to the servant, "where is the woman?"

"In the library, sir," was the reply.

A woman turned swiftly towards the door as Armande entered the library.

She slipped back from her head the hood of the long cloak she wore and Armande de Kercheval looked curiously at her face, with its extreme fairness, vivid red lips and crowned with a mass of pale gold hair.

She looked at him steadily, intently.

"You are Monsieur Armande de Kercheval?" she said.

"I am, madame, at your service," he replied.

"I have come to put it in your power to deliver over to the authorities the chief of the Scarlet Masks," she said.

Armande de Kercheval gave a quick start.

"Who are you?" he cried, but, even as he spoke, he remembered the Marquis St. Maur's description of the woman called Hortense who dwelt with the bandits of the Scarlet Masks and knew that that woman now stood before him.

"It matters but little who I am," she replied. "It is sufficient that I possess the power to deliver over the chief of the Scarlet Masks."

"What is your object in so doing?" asked Armande de Kercheval."

"There is a reward of 50,000 francs for the chief of the Scarlet Masks, alive or dead," she replied. "I have lived for ten years with the bandits and have grown weary of the life. This 50,000 francs will enable me to live in comfort. That is," and she shivered slightly, "if they do not kill me before I am out of their reach."

"I begin to understand you aright, it is simply your intention to betray the chief of the Scarlet Masks?" said Armande de Kercheval, "you do not also intend to divulge the secret of their retreat?"

"You are perfectly correct, monsieur," she replied. "I have no intention of betraying the secret of the retreat, though by doing so I would secure myself, and I trust you your honor not to take advantage of the power here to endeavor to discover that secret."

"You need not appeal to me to do so," replied Armande de Kercheval. "I am interested solely in the chief of the Scarlet Masks," and his brow grew dark and his beautiful, haggard eyes ignited ominously.

"Of this I am aware," said Hortense, "and for this reason I came to you instead of communicating directly with the chief of police in Paris. But I must come to the point. If I do not return to the retreat before daylight my absence will be discovered, I shall be suspected and probably share the fate of a bandit who once tried to play the part of traitor," and she lifted her hand significantly to her throat. "Please listen to me, attentively. Do you remember that part of the road through the forest where you were held up by the bandits?"

"I remember it perfectly," replied Armande de Kercheval, grimly."

"Very good," continued Hortense. "On Friday afternoon the chief and three of his men will be lying in wait at the same point for a traveling coach. This coach will not pass there until about six o'clock. Tomorrow will be Wednesday. You will have now will you not, to communicate with the police and make all arrangements?"

"Ample time," replied Armande, "and I thank you for your information."

"The chief and the other bandits will be at the place of attack between four and five o'clock," continued Hortense. "They will conceal themselves among the trees on the road of the coach. The gendarmes will know how to approach and surround them."

"I understand perfectly," said Armande de Kercheval, "but about yourself? You will leave the retreat before the chief is taken prisoner, will you not?"

"I shall," she replied. "I pretend to be ill Friday morning and not able to leave my room. Then I shall have the opportunity to get away unobserved. I shall go immediately to Paris, where I shall remain for the capture of the chief, claim the reward, and at once leave France. I am tired of the life, and she smiled a faint, cold smile. "And, now, I must go," she added, rising from her chair gracefully.

She moved towards the door, then, suddenly paused.

"Ah! I came near forgetting," she said. "Monsieur de Kercheval, you have a servant named Pierre called Andre?"

"Yes," replied Armande de Kercheval,

CLOTHING SALESMEN WANTED.

$150.00 PER MONTH AND EXPENSES MADE BY ALL OUR ACTIVE MEN. WE PAY MANY FAR MORE.

WE WANT MEN IN EVERY COUNTY

to sell Custom Clothes. If your customers is satisfactory and you want to make more money than ever before, write us. We manufacture a full line of Clothing, also Cloaks, Skirts and Furnishings. We control the Custom Tailoring trade of this country by our system of selling. Before contracting for territory we will show you how to make $150.00 per month and more. We have the finest line of samples ever shown to secure easily, high-class, legitimate salesmen. Our system of selling is original and no man can successfully imitate it. We will start you in business, furnish you with all the necessary outfit requiring every work we do, and will pay you a salary of $150.00 per month and expenses or a large commission if you prefer. Many of our salesmen are making from $5000 to $10,000 per year. We have been in business for fifteen years and have a reputation for square dealing and fair treatment to our employees that is unequaled by any clothing house in America. We have a capital of $500,000.00 fully paid up and a business that will stand the most rigid investigation before we engage a man. Write us today and you will receive by return mail our Special Custom Tailoring Plan, Large Catalogue, Tape Measure and Sample Book, and you will be on the way to make money. Don't delay a day, but write us today and we will give you a position with a $50,000.00 stock. You will receive fair treatment. Address

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN AMERICA.

EMPLOYMENT AT BIG WAGES.

THE LARGEST TAILORS in America.

We want to hear from a few more good men in every county to sell our Custom Tailoring. Wonderful Selling Plan. Biggest Line of Samples. Write for Free Outfit and Special Terms. Address

CHICAGO TAILORING CO.,

Wabash Ave. and Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN THE WORLD.

We want a few more good men to sell our Custom Tailoring. Write for Free Outfit and Special Custom Tailoring Plan. Big Line of Samples. Big Pay. Steady Work. Address

THE CHICAGO TAILORING CO.,

Wabash Ave. and Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

We Furnish You

Large, Elegant Sample Book, containing large cloth samples of our entire line of Custom Tailoring, Tape Measure, Instructions, Blanks, Rules, Etc., Etc., Etc., ALL FREE. Write for them today. Address

THE CHICAGO TAILORING CO.,

Wabash Ave. and Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Hon. Wm. McKinley, President of the United States, 1898.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your request I have examined the photograph for advertising purposes, and asking how I am pleased with the work, would say that I am pleased with everything by placing my order with you. Your prices are very low and garments as exact to my measurements that I shall continue to order from you. Wishing you success, I am, Yours truly, WM. MCKINLEY.

Also Ten Colored Fashion Plates, Instruction Book, Tape Measure, Business Cards, Catalogue and Price List. The finest and most complete. We also furnish you a Salesman's $15 Combination Price List. The prices are put together in such a manner that you can show your customer the entire line of goods, also the exact prices, without showing your customer the net cost, which, of course, you do not want yourself. As soon as you receive your sample book and general selling prices, you are ready for business and can begin to make money. Our prices are so low and our goods so much better than the ordinary ready-made clothing that you can sell to your friends and acquaintances at once, and after you have taken a few orders you will be surprised to find how easy it is to make $5.00 to $8.00 profit on every order. EVERY ONE WILL BE ASTONISHED at our low prices.

YOU REQUIRE NO MONEY. Just send us your name and address and we will send direct to your customers. We pay express charges, make collections, refund money if not satisfactory, and will even loan you a check for all your goods. You need collect no money, deliver no goods, simply go on taking orders, adding a liberal profit to our prices, and remit us our wholesale prices after you have collected from your customers. Could anything be more satisfactory? Can you afford to let this opportunity pass? Write us today.

THE OUTFIT IS FREE. We make no charges for the book and complete outfit, but as each outfit costs us 25 cents for postage, we ask you to send us 25 cents in stamps to help pay for postage. We want you to have this outfit in order that you may be enabled to see for yourself the merits of our system of selling. As a SALESMAN YOU ARE NOT RISKING ANYTHING as we are willing to trust you entirely on the part of EVERY APPLICANT, as we have no means of knowing who is worthy of confidence and who is not. Write us today and we will send you the outfit, also contract, and further agreeing to pay money as we are making big wages. The $1.00 you agree to pay when outfit is received does not go to us, but to the Publisher of this paper, who has kindly consented to receive it from you and forward it to us. Don't fail to write us today, as we have only a limited number of outfits to distribute. Address

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., West Side Enterprise Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

ENTERPRISE, Ill., Jan. 1, 1899. Gentlemen:—I received your Book and Complete Salesman's Outfit, as described above. I agree to complete it as this express order, and to remit you the amount stated and I feel sure of making a success of the business. I will say that I have had a large experience of good tailors, and I am pleased to say that your goods are far superior to what I expected from the description you gave me. I am sure I can sell your goods to my friends and acquaintances at once, and I will be pleased to recommend you to any one who may write you for information. Yours truly, [illegible]

Fill out the following and mail to us at once. Do not delay.

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., West Side Enterprise Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

Gentlemen:—Please send me your Complete Salesman's Outfit, Book and Complete Salesman's Outfit, as described above. I agree to complete it as this express order, and to remit you the amount stated and I feel sure of making a success of the business. I will say that I have had a large experience of good tailors, and I am pleased to say that your goods are far superior to what I expected from the description you gave me. I am sure I can sell your goods to my friends and acquaintances at once, and I will be pleased to recommend you to any one who may write you for information. Yours truly, [illegible]

Fill out the following and mail to us at once. Do not delay.

Name in full .....

Name of Postoffice, County and State to above line. .....

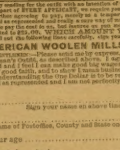
Your age .....

Married or single .....

Address all letters plainly to

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., Westside Enterprise Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.



DORÉE TABLETS

$2,000.00 IN PRESENTS. CAN YOU COUNT THE TABLETS? To the person or persons guessing the nearest to the number of tablets in each of the 5 packages contained in one box we will give $500.00; to the second nearest guesser we will give $250.00; to the third nearest guesser we will give $100.00; to the fourth nearest guesser we will give $50.00; to the fifth nearest guesser we will give $25.00. Dollar prizes. If two or more are tied for any of the larger prizes, the same or the next prize in each will be divided equally. Everyone knows equal opportunity distributes riches to all alike. Each contestant must receive a package of Dorée Tablets before guessing. Dorée Tablets are a positive cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Sick Headache. Address Dorée Tablet Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

with a look of surprised inquiry.

"Have him closely watched, monsieur, and if he attempt to leave the chateau seize him and confine him where he cannot possibly escape."

"What do you mean?" cried Armande de Kercheval. "Is it possible that this Andre is a bandit placed here as a spy?" he added, with a deep frown.

"Yes, monsieur," replied Hortense; "and if he learn of my visit the chief will not be captured and my life will not be worth a moment's purchase."

"I will attend to the fellow," said Armande de Kercheval, sternly.

Hortense turned to the door. Armande moved forward and opened it for her.

Hortense stepped across the threshold,

"Traitoress! damnable Traitoress!" he muttered.

but the next moment shrank back with a suppressed cry at the same time trying to draw forward the hood so as to conceal her face.

Armande sprang quickly by her.

The butler was coming along the hall, followed by a tall, strong, red-haired, bold-eyed fellow, dressed as a footman. The latter had paused abruptly, his eyes fixed upon Hortense.

At first he stared at her wonderingly, then, as she shrank and cowered, his eyes lighted savagely, a muttered oath left his lips, he leaped suddenly forward and made a dash for the front doors.

Armande de Kercheval sprang after him, and, as he stood fumbling wildly with the knob of the door, caught him by the collar, dealt him a blow on the side of the head which laid him stunned and prostrate upon the floor. Then Armande turned to the amazed butler and said, quietly:

"Call some men, have this fellow bound and then confined in one of the strong rooms."

When Andre recovered consciousness he found himself lying bound hand and foot. He looked at first vaguely about him until his eyes fell upon Hortense, when they lit with a glare of fury and he struggled desperately to break his bonds.

"Traitoress, damnable traitoress!" he cried, "may the curse of hell blast you! God! I would give my life for just a few moments' freedom in which to tear your false heart from your breast!"

"Take him away," said Armande de Kercheval to the men. And as they obeyed Andre's head sank upon his breast and the fury in his eyes gave place to despair.

"Betrayed!" he murmured, "betrayed, and I, trapped like a rat, am powerless."

Armande turned to Hortense whose lips were pale and whose limbs trembled.

"He is quite powerless to do you any ill now," said Armande.

She smiled wanly.

"Yes," she murmured, "and I realize what it means to live a hunted life."

"Do you regret what you have done?" asked Armande, curiously.

She lifted her head and a strange, exultant light leaped to her eyes.

"Regret it!" she cried, passionately. "No; a thousand times no. I shall not regret it even in the moment before death should I pay for it with my life."

The next moment she turned, opened the door and passed out into the night.

When old Jean entered the room where the Count de Kercheval lay, he slowly, reluctantly, approached the bed. He gave a little sigh of relief when he saw that those awful eyes were closed and that the count was sleeping.

Jean sat down beside the bed, and, in a little while his head sank upon his breast, his faded, gentle eyes grew pained and troubled.

"I do not see how I can keep the knowledge from Monsieur Armande," he said, unconsciously speaking aloud.

He started at the sound of his own voice in the silence of the room and turned quickly towards the bed. The eyes of the Count de Kercheval were wide open and fixed his piteously entreating.

"Oh, Monsieur le Comte, do not look at me like that," cried old Jean. "What can I do? Monsieur Armande will now have control of everything. He must discover how matters stand. Monsieur le Comte, old Jean would give the few remaining years of his life to keep such knowledge from Monsieur Armande, to spare you, but I am powerless. Oh, do not think harshly of me, Monsieur le Comte, the good Lord knows I have loved you and served you faithfully for many years."

He bent his head and pressed his lips to the long, waxen hand which lay, like a dead hand, outside the coverlet. Then, with a shudder he turned away, for he dared not look upon that still, colorless face, with its terrible eyes.

Very early the next morning Armande de Kercheval started for Paris. In the evening he returned. He took a perchee at dining, and, before going upstairs to visit his father and Marguerite, he summoned Jean.

"Jean," he said, "tomorrow morning I wish to look over my father's books, accounts, etc. Be in the library, therefore, about ten o'clock."

Jean's head sank upon his breast.

"Yes, Monsieur Armande," he replied, in a low voice.

Armande went upstairs to his sister's room. Marguerite had been informed of her father's condition, but the physician had cautioned Armande against allowing her to see the count.

"The shock might prove very injurious to her in her present weak condition," he said.

"Oh, Armande, the day has seemed so long," murmured Marguerite, piteously, as he bent over and kissed her.

"Perhaps the shadows will drift away from your life, sweet Marguerite," Armande was thinking, as he looked down upon her pale, sad face.

The night passed and the morning came, bleak and storming.

Jean had arranged everything in the library as Armande had instructed him. Then Jean went to his own little room and waited with his white head bowed upon his trembling old hands.

An hour passed and then a voice in the corridor outside called Jean, Jean!

The old man rose, went to the door and opened it. One of the maids was outside.

"Jean," she said, "Monsieur Armande wants you in the library," and Jean felt as though those words were his death-warrant.

A little while later he stood, with bowed head like a criminal, before Armande de Kercheval. The latter looked very white and stern.

"Jean," he said, "I am amazed, horrified. Can you give me any explanation of the terrible condition in which I find my father's affairs? Why, our home, the ancestral home of De Kercheval, is mortgaged, and, unless redeemed, will, at my father death, pass into the hands of strangers. But, thank heaven, I shall be able to prevent that as soon as I come into my fortune. But, tell me, Jean, what has my father done with all the money he has raised?"

The grandest part of the money went for Mademoiselle Marguerite's expenses and pleasure," said Monsieur Armande," replied Jean, in a low voice.

"Jean, you cannot know what you are talking about, cried Armande de Kercheval. "Mademoiselle Marguerite's allowance and mine come from the fortune we left her from our mother."

Jean made no reply. Armande looked at his bowed form, drooping head and trembling hands for a moment or so while a great fear gathered in his eyes.

"Jean, Jean!" he cried at length, "my God! It cannot be that my father's fortune has made way with the fortunes of Marguerite and myself? Speak, man! This suspense is maddening!"

But Jean did not speak, he simply lifted his sad eyes to Armande's face, and in them the latter read his answer. The next moment Armande de Kercheval had thrown himself into a chair and covered his face with his hands.

"Oh, God!" he cried, "is the house of De Kercheval accursed?"

The long hours of the day passed.

The Count de Kercheval lay with his eyes, yearning, infinitely pitiful, fixed upon the door, but the one for whom he watched, in terrible mute anguish, came not.

The physician paid his daily visit towards evening. Upon leaving the sick chamber he sought Armande de Kercheval who had spent that long, bitter day shut up in the library. The physician started at the sight of the young man's face.

"Great heavens! Monsieur Armande! What is the matter with you?" he cried. "Are you ill?"

"No, I am not ill," replied Armande de Kercheval, "but—I have been worried today. You wish to speak with me, doctor?"

"Yes," gravely replied the physician. "Monsieur Armande, a change for the worse has taken place in your father's condition. The summons last more than a few days and he may die at any moment. There is nothing but a merciful release in a case like his."

"Yes," quietly replied Armande de Kercheval, "it is far better."

After the departure of the physician Armande de Kercheval slowly ascended the stairs and entered his father's room. Darkness had fallen and a night lamp burned beside the bed.

The eyes fixed upon the door lighted with something like joy as they fell upon the form of Armande. The latter approached the bed and looked down into the eyes which met his so imploringly, with such passionate intensity that it seemed to Armande that the mute lips opened and spoke the word:

"Forgive!"

Armande looked across inquiringly at Jean who stood upon the other side of the bed.

"He knows all, Monsieur Armande," said Jean. "He has watched that door all day for your coming. Monsieur Armande, look into his poor eyes: tell him that you forgive."

"Father," said Armande, "I do not know what has tempted you into betraying the trust you left in my hands, robbing my sister and myself penniless, depriving me of my birth-right. You can speak no word in justification of yourself, for heaven has set the seal of death upon your lips. I shall speak no word of reproach to you: I shall not judge nor condemn you, for you will soon stand in the presence of a Judge who cannot err."

He paused for a moment, but there was no change in the expression of the eyes

(Continued on page fifteen.)

A Superb Rye Whisky

SENT YOU ON APPROVAL

At 90 cents the Quart. Absolutely the finest Rye Whisky on sale and we prove it to you.

This is how it comes.

IN PLAIN BOX FREE from marks indicating contents. FOUR FULL QUART QUARTS EXPRESS PREPAID AT $3.60.

SINGLE QUARTS SENT AT 98 CENTS NOT PREPAID.

The original old-fashioned rich Schweyer Pennsylvania Rye.
Made by the famous old firm of Schweyer, Graupp, Jones, Hare-Hepburn and Schweyer, an exceptional master of his calling, a man of extreme pride in his undertakings, and a man famed among all who know him for his sturdy integrity of character and honesty of purpose. This whisky—the entire product exactly lasting between us and the trade—is now offered at 90 cents per quart bottle.
Or, in case lots at $2.50 and gallons at $3.00 are being sold today in the fine liquor trade and fancy family grocery trade, out of this identical same shipment.
In single quarts at 97 cents you are paying, as a matter, the best delivered cost only.
In the five gallon cans, at $3.00, which is prepaid by us, you are buying it at the same price as the biggest jobber has been paying for it in hundred barrel lots.
We ask you to make a thorough test, sampling if not afraid (we're), you may send back the goods without expense to yourself and your remittance will be at once returned without controversy. Send price of goods, address and shipping directions.

JOHN SCHWEYER & CO., Distillers Central Distributing Depot Twelfth & Lafflin Streets, Chicago.

We mean what we say. Then who knows blank of the name of Schweyer & Co., will not fail us. Information in Mercantile Agency Books, Express Offices, or Banks, etc. We are good for what we say.
SPECIAL—For orders from Colorado, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, please write us before remitting.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$30 Saved We will save you $30, on a top buggy, or will pay you $30 cash. Our buggies are guaranteed for two years, and can be returned for less than $75. 5 months throughout the United States. Write for catalogue and prices.

Guaranteed For Five Years. We will last 25 years. We ship to you with the understanding that if you don't find it to be the highest bargain in the way of a top buggy and to be equal to any buggy you have ever seen sold for $75, that you may return it to us at our expense and we will pay all freight charges one way. Write us to-day for our new catalogue with 100 illustrations. Mailed free.
We want you money. WE HAVE NO AGENTS. Write now for free Catalogue. MARVIN SMITH CO., 25-27-29 N. Jefferson St. 8-270 Chicago.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$53.35

No. 80037 Canopy Top Surrey, 3/4 Elliptic rear springs, 1 1/2 inch tires, 32 inch wheels, 3 inch cushion, 3 inch quarter by Phaeton with end seat

WOODEN INDIAN'S WIDOW

Story of a Rash and Remarkable Marriage---An Actress Involved---in Quest of a Lost Fortune.

By MARO ROLFE.
(Copyrighted All Rights Reserved.)

SYNOPSIS.

Anabel Sheldon, an actress, is stranded in a Western village. She becomes engaged to Will Harrington after knowing him only a short while, but in the meantime she is so set upon by his friend Wallingford and Jim Stone, the wealthy tobacconist of Chilliworthy, leading actor of the company, that she breaks off the engagement and goes to Chicago in search of employment. She writes, begging Will to send her money for ticket, but instead of that receives from Stone by name, an interested note and not unpleasant, signed Will. After it was all over Stone being absent the others agree to put a wooden Indian cigar store in place of the wooden Indian with Anabel. On the package Jim was a package and he married Anabel to the wooden Indian. Jim Stone appeared later and claimed his reward for the wooden Indian groom. That night Anabel packed and went to Chicago. Now if we could unscrew that business under his feathers and get out that deceased, he might stay here a long time and welcome."

"Finished the job done, I've tried it. I guess we'll have to buy him," said Stone. "Shall we go inside and dicker for him?"

This nodded assent and they entered the little cigar store. The proprietor was away and Stone, looking things over found a way, his wife was suspicious and would not talk to him.

"I'll see about it this evening," Jim said; and he kept his word. The next day he said to Anabel:

Now I've got the wooden Indian all safe and sound. I've got my part fair and square. We'll just get married now, and then we'll get three hundred thousand dollars."

"Let's get the money matter fixed first of all," she suggested.

"Not till you're Mrs. James Stone."

"But can't we—"

"Not any longer."

"But I'll love, won't I? Be reasonable."

"You're a little too cute for me and I guess I'll arrange things my own way," said Stone, doggedly.

"But I ought to be considered, too."

"You and Mr. Dummy best me once," he grinned; "now I and Mr. Dummy are going to have you all to ourselves."

"A queer courtship yours."

"No courtship at all, but business. I was a chump in Shadeville; in Chicago I'm a queer thing, Pinafore, and I'm not. I'm that Indian and the paper's in his head all right, but I bet you've got any good till you marry me, and that ain't."

"How do you know the paper is there?"

Because I've seen it there, and took it out and looked at it, or I saw the envelope it's sealed up in. He told himself that I've got that document and it tells just where the money is hid, or that's what the lawyers say."

"Yes, they say," answered Anabel, thoughtfully. "Say, Jim, suppose that I really cared anything for me you wouldn't handle this paper, but keep it and all that."

"Three hundred thousand dollars in cash is a nice fat roll," said Stone.

"Yes—we are going to have good clothes, good eating and good drinking the rest of his life and he was going to live in Chicago and have the finest saloon in town. This was his ambition as he revealed it to Anabel.

She had seen Chilliworthy, and it had been arranged that he should leave Chicago as soon as he got strong enough. She had added to her small store and now had money enough for her present needs. Besides she was earning a little more all the time. Her husband once in safety, she felt equal to the task of parting with Stone. She hoped his quest would be successful. Then she could give him some money and some hope and get away from him. Then should he learn of her marriage to Chilliworthy. Her friend would be safe from his resentment and she would suddenly drop out of his knowledge and in time he would give her up and go his way. For the time it was her interest to keep Stone friendly and unsuspicious. She gave him smiles, but no promises.

One day he said:

"I have found the wooden Indian. He's standing before a cigar store away up beyond Lincoln park."

"Are you sure it's the same?" she asked.

"Certainly—he's got a slate in his head and my bullet holes are there, only they're not putty. He's had a new coat of paint, but he's the same wooden Indian you married."

"We must get him, then, but I'd like to see him before we do anything about it," she replied.

"I'll take you out to see him right now or any time."

"Come on, then," she said, promptly.

It was her former husband, Mr. Dummy—that was no doubt of that.

I never thought I'd be so glad to see him again," she thought. "Now if we could unscrew that business under his feathers and get out that deceased, he might stay here a long time and welcome."

"Finished the job done. I've tried it. I guess we'll have to buy him," said Stone. "Shall we go inside and dicker for him?"

This nodded assent and they entered the little cigar store. The proprietor was away and Stone, looking things over found a way, his wife was suspicious and would not talk to him.

"I'll see about it this evening," Jim said; and he kept his word. The next day he said to Anabel:

Now I've got the wooden Indian all safe and sound. I've got my part fair and square. We'll just get married now, and then we'll get three hundred thousand dollars."

"Let's get the money matter fixed first of all," she suggested.

"Not till you're Mrs. James Stone."

"But can't we—"

"Not any longer."

"But I'll love, won't I? Be reasonable."

"You're a little too cute for me and I guess I'll arrange things my own way," said Stone, doggedly.

"But I ought to be considered, too."

"You and Mr. Dummy beat me once," he grinned; "now I and Mr. Dummy are going to have you all to ourselves."

"A queer courtship yours."

"No courtship at all, but business. I was a chump in Shadeville; in Chicago I'm a queer thing Pinafore, and I'm not. I'm that Indian and the paper's in his head all right, but I bet you've got any good till you marry me, and that ain't."

"How do you know the paper is there?"

Because I've seen it there, and took it out and looked at it, or I saw the envelope it's sealed up in. He told himself that I've got that document and it tells just where the money is hid, or that's what the lawyers say."

"Yes, they say," answered Anabel, thoughtfully. "Say, Jim, suppose that I really cared anything for me you wouldn't handle this paper, but keep it and all that."

"Three hundred thousand dollars in cash is a nice fat roll," said Stone.

"Yes—we are going to have good clothes, good eating and good drinking the rest of his life and he was going to live in Chicago and have the finest saloon in town. This was his ambition as he revealed it to Anabel.

She had seen Chilliworthy, and it had been arranged that he should leave Chicago as soon as he got strong enough. She had added to her small store and now had money enough for her present needs. Besides she was earning a little more all the time. Her husband once in safety, she felt equal to the task of parting with Stone. She hoped his quest would be successful. Then she could give him some money and some hope and get away from him. Then should he learn of her marriage to Chilliworthy. Her friend would be safe from his resentment and she would suddenly drop out of his knowledge and in time he would give her up and go his way. For the time it was her interest to keep Stone friendly and unsuspicious. She gave him smiles, but no promises.

One day he said:

"I have found the wooden Indian. He's

The People Want Pure Goods.

They have proven this. Many families send great distances for all the clothing, groceries, medicine and other articles of daily use because they know that by so doing they can procure a much better article for less money than they can buy at home. He is particularly true of fine whiskey. Any physician will tell you that for many weak people a fine Rye Whiskey is the best tonic and medicine on earth, but the great trouble is to get a pure whiskey in a well ripened, mellow and unadulterated state. This is now made possible by John Schweyer & Co., whose generous offer appears on another page of this paper. The whiskies distilled by this company have always sold on their known fineness—purity and age. Better read their advertisement and write them today.

Anabel shook her head.

"Can you reach him by mail?"

"I have no address."

"But he will see you again?"

"Yes, tomorrow, likely."

"All right; we will have a detective follow him to his abiding place and then we will see what we can do about the matter."

Next morning Anabel stood at Clark and Madison streets and waited for Jim Stone. He soon leaned from a car and joined her. The lawyers' detective was standing on the opposite side of the street.

"Good morning, Stone," Stone's inquiring greeting.

"I've decided that I will not be forced into any arrangement in such a high-handed way," he said. "I didn't deal with me in that style."

"All you can't deal with me in any other way," was his determined answer. "Anabel, I want to ask you a question."

"Go on."

"Was that really your brother I saw that night?"

"Do you imagine I deceived you?"

"Do you care enough for that man?"

"Of course I do, and I'm a right to. I'd be a dandy if I didn't like my brother, wouldn't I?"

"I've had my suspicions about that man," Jim went on, "and I'm going to find out all about him without any more waiting."

On the next night but one Harrington Chilliworthy had planned to leave Chicago, and Anabel was fond of it. He was still feeble, but improved somewhat. Soon he would be quite strong again.

Anabel knew that as soon as Stone began investigations her a sire at all he would learn everything.

"Ah!" she thought. "Then he will make trouble for me. I'm a clever."

"I thought you'd be more sensible after you'd effered your proposition," Stone continued.

"I must step much last night," was her significant answer. "Is there anything more that you have to say today?"

Stone looked steadily out of his eyes. He breathed hard and it was evident that he was holding down a rage, but he controlled himself and said:

"I'll not be trifled with here you."

"I will not be compelled to marry you," she replied, firmly. "I am too stubborn, too much like you. I have taken your money, but for that. What would you think if I should refuse to return it to you without the money, if I must, rather than be forced into marriage with you?"

I would think you would change your mind after a little cooling off."

"Well, I don't talk to your any longer now," she declared. "I am not a child whom you can scare and win away. The detective hesitated a moment, then replied:

"I can't follow him and search the house for the cigar sign, too. I'll search the house."

To search a house in broad daylight would be a risky matter for them. For this trained sleuth it was easy enough. He entered by the front door and by the time the police demanded to see the meter and all the rooms on the lower floor. He went into every room and peered into all corners of each room.

Was it your husband that just went out?" he asked the woman.

"No, a gentleman," a country gent down here learning the whisky business, he said.

"And how does he get on?"

Reasonably, almost. He absorbs about a gallon of whisky every day and evening, I judge; comes in drunk regularly. Says he keeps his stuff locked in that big box in his room—looks to me like a coffin. Brought it day before yesterday."

"If you don't know what's in the box, you ought to find out," suggested the detective.

"I don't dare to touch it. I've often wished I had a man to open it. S'pose you help us open it for Mr. Stone won't show up likely till late."

They entered the room and the woman opened the closet door hastily.

The box was gone.

"Land sakes," she cried. "How he ever got it out so slick I can't guess. They made rashes in getting it in."

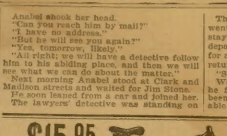
A hasty examination convinced the detective that the case, which had probably contained the wooden Indian, had been lowered from the window.

He hurried down town and his employers went to the theater for Anabel and instructed her to wait for Jim Stone at the usual place next morning.

"We'll take him in hand when you leave him," was the decision. "We'll have to handle him boldly."

That night, after the performance, Anabel went to the house where Chilliworthy was staying, to do what she could to hasten his departure. She was told that he had gone for a walk at nine that evening and had not returned.

"Something is terribly wrong!" she cried. Was he in the hands of the police? Had he fallen again and died in the street or been taken to a hospital? The most favorable contingency was heartrending.



$15.95

ONLY ONE DOLLAR DOWN

Cut this ad. out and send to us with $1.00 and we will send you this HIGH GRADE 1899 MODEL SOLID VICTORIA BICYCLE, Ladies' or Gents' Style, as illustration. If, upon examination, it is not satisfactory in every respect after 10 days' trial in your own town, return it to us at our expense and we will refund all you paid us. Guarantee 5 years. Height of frame 20, 22 or 24 inch, as you order. Weight 35 pounds. Tires are the greatest improvement over any other bicycle. Wheels are interchangeable. Handle bars are nickel plated. Saddle is the celebrated Victoria Hygienic. Pedals are rubber. Sprocket guard. Chain is the best made. Bearings are the finest. Finish is the best. Guaranteed equal to any $50.00 wheel made. Sold by others for $50.00. Our price $15.95. Sundries and repairs at one-half usual prices. Sample wheel sent C. O. D. subject to examination. Write for our free catalogue and sundry list. Bicycles from $10.50 to $50.00. Agents wanted everywhere. Big profits. Write today.

THE VICTORIA IS COVERED BY A BINDING GUARANTEE. Frame is 20 or 24 inch, coaster brake, Victoria Hygienic saddle, Morgan & Wright tires, detachable chain, Victoria pedals, finish and equipment complete. Weight about 35 lbs. Sold by others at $14.95 and cheap at that price

She shuddered as she wondered what the outcome would be.

CHAPTER VII.

REVELATIONS OR A LONELY GRAVE.

Anabel went out through the darkness and looked for her husband everywhere for many blocks in every direction. She did not find him dead nor come upon any clue to his whereabouts. The balance of the night was full of vague terror to her.

She was out before daylight and got the papers and scanned every page carefully, but saw no account of Chillworthy's capture by the authorities.

She went at the appointed time to watch for Jim Stone. He did not come, but a boy, after asking her name, handed her a sealed envelope. The detectives waiting across the street cursed as they saw Anabel receive the letter.

"The man is too sharp for us," one of them said. "He smells danger and keeps his distance."

"You caught him and could not find him," Anabel read. "He is buried. You will never see him again. I have found out who that man was. I know what he was to you and all your treachery to me. You will never see your money and you will never forget Jim Stone. You won't catch me now, but I'll catch up with you some time."

She felt dizzy and would have fallen had not someone put out a hand to save her. Thrusting the letter in her bosom, she entered a nearby drug store and, after taking a powerful tonic, hastened away to her sister's. She felt it would do no good to go to her lawyer's and she craved womanly and sisterly sympathy so much.

"Dead! she kept saying to herself. "Dead—dead—dead!! And this is the end of all my dream of love, for—oh, Harry—Harry, I did love you. I have been a careless, commonplace girl, but I did love you, my husband, I did love you!"

She was a pitiable figure when she staggered into her sister's house. The policeman's wife caught her in her arms and supported her to a little room that had always been hers when she was there, the same in which she had sobbed out her despair on that night, many weeks before, when she had waited for her husband that was to be, and he had not come.

"Now," she thought drearily, "he will never come." Her long anxiety and consciousness had worn upon her terribly. This added trouble was more than she could bear. She became unconscious and knew nothing more for three weeks. When they told her how long and how dangerously ill she had been, she asked to know all that had happened in the interval.

Then it was little to tell. The police had not found Chillworthy or heard anything of him. They had seen the letter Jim Stone had written and instituted the most searching inquiries. They could not doubt that Stone was concerned in Chillworthy's death, but they had raked the city unavailingly for Stone and decided that he had fled from Chicago or killed himself. Anabel's lawyers had put themselves in communication with Chillworthy's people and informed him of her inheritance and the disappearance of the wooden Indian. The cigar sign had not been recovered and their detectives also had been unable to locate Stone dead or alive.

Anabel took up her daily life again and now for the first time fully realized that existence may be a burden. She seemed so changed that her old gay associates scarcely believed her the same young woman. All her reckless jollity was gone. She was staid and quiet and thoughtful, living every day under the shadow of an awful sorrow.

"Some time I may be myself again and all that," she said, "but the outlook is black enough now."

One day her lawyers sent for her. Fine cast down with a weary hopelessness and waited for what they might say.

"We have been trying to decipher the key to the document Jason Trounce concealed in the head of the wooden Indian," she was informed, "but we can't do it. Neither the cipher paper nor the key will tell the story without the other. We have sought for the other sign in vain—can find no trace of it since it was in Stone's lodgings on the west side. Our detectives believe that if they can penetrate the mystery of your husband's disappearance or assassination they will find out more about Stone, and after that may get some trace of the missing document. Do you follow me?"

Anabel nodded.

"You may be needed to help in some way —perhaps in not a very pleasant way. Are you strong enough to bear a shock and may we depend on you, Mrs. Chillworthy?"

"I feel that I can do or bear anything," she said, earnestly, "anything that can possibly help me to some knowledge of my husband's fate. You have but to instruct me, and so on."

"Could your fear excitement and be a strong, brave woman today?" the lawyer continued.

"Today—this hour. The legacy has lost most of its interest to me but I could go through torture to learn of my husband's fate."

"Well," the lawyer went on, "I wanted to be sure your strength was sufficient before I told you all. Our detectives have already been following clues in your husband's case. Stone's letter to you stated that your husband was dead and buried. We do not know how or where your husband died, but we have found out that at a certain point away out on the further bank of the Desplaines river, Stone and others buried something at the time the cigar store contained. It was the wooden Indian. With a woman's inconsistency Anabel fainted as she beheld it.

One of the lawyers sawed off the head of the figure and wrapped it up carefully and rolled the remainder of the cigar sign over the bank into the river and thanked fortune they would see it no more.

At the office they put the document and its key side by side and made the astounding discovery that three hundred one thousandths of an inch separated the wooden Indian's body.

The astute and careful lawyer had completed the work of the astute and careful Mr. Jason Trounce with a vengeance.

CHAPTER VIII.

IT ALL ENDS WELL.

This lawyer, who had lived a Christian life for twenty-five years, now made the astounding discovery that he had not forgotten how to swear and wondered if men ever really put their sins behind them and if any other man since Adam had ever made such a bad break as he had been guilty of.

A search for the decapitated first husband of Anabel was immediately instituted. A reward of ten dollars was offered. That was more than the mutilated sign was worth as well, and to have offered more would have been to have excited the suspicion of persons of an investigating predilection who might have dissected the remains of Mr. Dummy and blasted the prospects of his widow.

The lawyers waited and hoped, and as for Anabel, she thought unutterable things about them.

A week passed and brought no developments; but on a Sunday morning came the announcement in the papers that the police had, only the night before, obtained proof positive that Mansfield Truesdale had committed suicide and that Harringtone Chillworthy, who had been charged with his murder on circumstantial evidence and had made his escape from the police station immediately after his marriage, had been unjustly accused.

After reading the papers that day, a man who had been picked up unconscious was cut out on the south side, and carried into the nearest house by a genuine good Samaritan, or rather Chicagoan, and who had but recently come to the conclusion that he was still of the earth earthy, called his benefactor to him and announced that he was Harrington Chillworthy, the sorely persecuted actor who had married Anabel Sheldon in a police station, and wanted to see her worse than he wanted anything else.

"How can I send word to her?" asked the good Chicagoan, without any comment whatever.

Chillworthy gave the address of the McGorgians.

Anabel was having a dismal Sunday morning of it. The sun was shining brightly, but on the world it looked very much the sat like one in a trance for ten minutes after the following message was put in her hands:

"Your husband lives and longs for you. Come to the address on the other side."

While waiting for a car down-town she idly watched a detachment of the Salvation Army as it filed past her, drums beating and banners flying.

The ensign placed the end of the flagstaff down on the pavement and beckoned to her ostentatiously. She could scarcely believe her eyes.

"Is that you, Jim Stone?" she asked, half-doubtfully, "is that you or your ghost?"

"It's me all right, Anabel."

"What are you doing there? You seem out of your element."

"Trying to serve the Lord. Which way are you going, Anabel?"

(Continued on page thirteen.)

She emptied the contents of the purse on the bed.

FREE TO MILLIONS OF SUFFERERS.

The New Cure for Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Trouble.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of Swamp-Root.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has proven wonderful powers in curing kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid diseases.

Kidney trouble is responsible for more sickness and sudden deaths than any other disease, and is so deceptive that thousands have it without knowing it.

Thousands owe their health and even life to Swamp-Root and thousands more who to-day think themselves beyond help, can be made well by the use of this great remedy.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the Ledger, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health to it, and the very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root. Be sure and mention the Chicago Ledger when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores.

A London Marriage License.

The cost of the ordinary marriage license in London is £2 2s. 6d. Surrogates in the country charge a little more. The church at which it is intended the ceremony shall be performed must be named in the body of the license. The day is a matter of arrangement with the clergyman. The license endures for three months from the day of obtaining it.

"Going to ride a chainless this year: "No; a horseless."

FOR MEN ONLY.

Free Trial Package of This New Discovery Mailed to Every Man Sending Name and Address—Quickly Restores Strength and Vigor.

Free trial packages of a most remarkable remedy are being mailed to all who will write the Erie Medical Company, 64 Erie National Bank building, Ft. Wayne, Ind., stating that you desire one of their free trial packages will be complied with promptly. The remedy is the outgrowth of the fact that great class of men who are unable to find the cause of their trouble and the remedy to enable them to cure it, even easy it is to be cured of sexual weakness, lost manhood, the proper remedies are employed. The Institute makes no restrictions. Any man who writes will be sent a free sample, carefully sealed in a plain package so that no embarrassment need be had for unless renewed or publicity. Readers are requested to write without delay.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

TEA SET FREE
56 PIECES.
Full size, for family use, beautifully decorated & made entirely of porcelain. Will not crack, chip or break. Guaranteed for 5 years. Given free for selling only 30 packages of Bluine at 10 cents per package. Full directions how to obtain the Tea Set with each package. No money required. We trust you. Write us to-day and we will send you the Bluine by return mail. When sold send us the money and we will send you the Tea Set by express, freight prepaid. Bluine is the best laundry blue in the world. It is a home product and will please you. Write to-day. Address, AMERICAN BLUINE COMPANY, Dept. B 30 West Fifth St., MAY TOWN, CITY.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

SPECIAL 60 DAYS OFFER TO INTRODUCE OUR LATEST LARGE POWERFUL ACHROMATIC TELESCOPE, THE EXCELSIOR.

5 10 15 25 Range JUST WHAT YOU WANT ON SEA FARM OR RANCH

Will bring objects as near as if only a few miles away. Telescopes are made by one of the largest manufacturers of Europe, and are of latest and best construction in every respect. They are HIGHLY POLISHED, BRASS LACQUERED AND MOUNTED, and, as the engraving shows, are of handsome appearance. Each glass is guaranteed perfect. Every instrument is fitted with a powerful sun glass, which enables the user to read the time by the sun at any time of the day. Also a compass is attached to the telescope, which enables the user to find the points of the compass at any time. Every telescope has a handsome leather case. Should the telescope not prove satisfactory, it may be returned within ten days and money will be refunded. Remember, this is a special offer for a limited time only. Send your order at once. Address, AMERICAN MERCHANDISE CO., 1 Madison Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FAT — CORPUS LEAN

Will reduce fat at rate of 20 to 35 lbs. per month without injury to health. Contains no Iodine, Arsenic or Mercury. Endorsed by leading physicians. Write for pamphlet. Sold by druggists. Mailed in plain wrapper for 10c. and postage. L. E. Marsh Co., 23 and 25 Madison Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

MADE — LEAN

ABSOLUTELY HARMLESS. Simple Sleeping in fat-producing Cloth. Reduces from 1 to 3 pounds every night. Keeps a clear complexion and rosy cheeks. Sold by all Druggists.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Why the O'Halligan's Moved.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

One Feature.

"Would you like to see women smoke?"

"I think it would be handy if a fellow wanted a light."

A Sure Effacement.

Foreign Novelist—I want to "do" America incognito—to be totally unknown and unrecognized wherever I go.

American (in London)—Nothing easier, old chap. All you've got to do is to assume the name of one of our former vice presidents.

The People Want Pure Goods.

They have proven this. Many families send great distances for all the clothing, groceries, medicine and other articles of daily use because they know that by so doing they can procure a much better article for less money than they can buy at home. This is particularly true of fine whiskey. Any physician will tell you that for many weak people a fine Rye Whiskey is the best tonic and medicine on earth, but the great trouble is to get a pure whiskey in a well ripened, mellow and untampered state. This is now made possible by John Schweyer & Co., whose generous offer appears on another page of this paper. The whiskies distilled by this company have always sold on their known fineness—purity and age. Better read their advertisement and write them today.

An Ante-Expansionist.

Hoax—How did you find out that Kydder was opposed to expansion?

Joax—By playing poker with him.

"So."

"Yes; as soon as he got into the game he got up to increase the ante."

"Well, what of that?"

"Why, that makes him an ante-expansionist, doesn't it?"

Comparatively Easy.

Edith—They say Jack Ricketts is drinking terribly ever since Penelope refused him. Isn't that awful?

Ethel—Oh, I don't know—just think how much harder he would have drank if she had married him.

When Wifey Cries.

When my wife cries—
I'd move the world to please the dear.
Such eyes! Such eyes!
When my wife cries! You hear! You hear!

A Wicked Young Goat.

There once was a giddy young chamois,
Who went for a walk with his mamois,
When she said, "My dear child,
I fear you are wild!"
The wicked young goat exclaimed, "Damois!"

Curiosity.

Mr. Baldpate (to bashful boy)—What's the matter, little man? Has the cat got your tongue?

Tom—Naw; has she got your hair?

She—They thaw out pipes now with electricity.

He—Yes; I wonder how it would work on a Boston girl?

Homeseekers' Excursions.

On the first and third Tuesdays in April and May, 1899, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway will sell round-trip excursion tickets (good 21 days) from Chicago, Milwaukee and other points on its line, to a great many points in South and North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and other western and southwestern states, at greatly reduced rates. Take a trip west and see the wonderful crop results of last year and what an amount of good land can be purchased for a little money. Further information as to rates, routes, prices of farm lands, etc., may be obtained on application to any coupon ticket agent or by addressing George H. Bradford, General Passenger Agent, Old Colony Building, Chicago, Ill.

Injured Innocence.

"That sir," exclaimed the indignant merchant, "is what I call a gratuitous falsehood."

"It's nothing of the kind," replied the unscrupulous salesman; "it got a salary and a commission for telling that falsehood."

Part of It.

"What do they mean by this phrase, 'The white man's burden?'" asked the citizen who had read Kipling's poem.

"Taxes," replied the other man, who was just then cancelling a revenue stamp.

After Lunch.

The Lion (gazing on a photo of the late hunter)—He certainly was good to me.

PERSONAL.—Any lady or gentleman wishing to correspond with the opposite sex for fun, pastime, improvement or marriage, should write at once to us. We have a large list of persons wishing to correspond and introduce you by mail. Many pleasant flirtations, warm friends and happy marriages are arranged through us. Everything strictly confidential. We refer to this paper. Address with stamp for reply. Personal Correspondence Club, Chicago, Ill.

What Was Lacking.

Pete—I hesh yo's bin admitted to full communion wif de First Baptish church?

Abe (sadly)—Well, no; not exactly—dey won't let me take up de collection yit.

Well-Known Terms.

A Dog Pound.

How He Won Her.

Hawkeley—Here's a pretty girl eloped with a dentist!

Hunt—Hum! I suppose at the last minute he didn't pull the tooth.

AGENTS WANTED

FREE! FREE!!

Any one can earn this Beautiful Gold Plated Hunting Case Stem Winder Watch, Charm, and Chain (Guaranteed) a perfect timekeeper, by selling our ELECTRIC LAMP WICKS. They can be sold in a few hours. They are practically indestructible. No trimming, smoke; nor smell. Are guaranteed to last 1000 hours.

OUR GRAND 30-DAY OFFER: Send your name and address at once for prepaid parcel containing sample Wick, with terms and prices. Don't delay. Write today. Don't wait. Do it now.

EMPIRICAL WICK COMPANY, Dept. 11 Orange, N. J.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

COMBINATION DIPPER. Seven articles in one. Dipper, Pitcher, Spoon, Strainer, Skimmer, Funnel and Cover. Weighs 1 pound. Sells on sight. Sample 25 cents. Agents wanted. Address RUNDELL MFG'Y., CORNING, N. Y.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WATCH On 10 days' trial before buying. Guaranteed stem wind and stem set, with Elgin or Waltham movement. Write for FREE WATCH CATALOGUE. Address Dept. 11 Standard Watch Co., 100 Fulton St., New York.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BIG MAIL DO YOU WANT TO RECEIVE Lots of LETTERS, Papers, Cards, Magazines, Novelties, etc. If so, send us 10 Cents for FREE silver and we will put your name in our agents' directory, which we send to manufacturers, publishers and supply houses, and you will receive two or three times as many letters as you now get. Address AGENTS' DIRECTORY CO., Lock Box 1, Indiana, Indiana County, Pa.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

"What is the 'White Man's Burden'?"

"The dear tax."

Improved United States History.

By IKE QUIGLEY, Historian.

[Continued from last week.]

CHAPTER III.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS.

It is indeed wonderful the effect events, insignificant in themselves, have upon the history of nations—aye, upon the world. If Napoleon's marshal had only wanted half an hour flirting with a bar maid the battle of Waterloo would have remained discernity. If Adam had refused to eat the apple Eve handed him you and I would be in the Garden of Eden killing snakes. If an Italian opera company had not visited Iceland two seasons after Lief Erickson left his wife a widow, the Indian would be the monarch of the United States; the wild fox would, unscared, be digging his hole where I sit at this moment, and Europe would have no place to dump the refuse of her population.

But, unlike everything else that didn't, this did; the Italian opera company went to Iceland and Lief's wife got mashed on the dapper little dago who sang first tenor and had the dyspepsia. The dyspepsia was brought on by the peculiar chunks the Iceland hotels served him. He didn't know it was dyspepsia; he thought it was love, and imagined that Lief's remaining better half was the guilty female. It ended in the usual way, for when the dago singers left Iceland the population was shy one widow and Italy added a matron to its comic report, as they were married soon after landing. As the news of the event would have to interview the preacher or go to jail.

Of the important event led up to the occupation of America by the people from the east, the fact, that Lief's living half kept a diary seems lost sight of. It is of the greatest importance for after the eloping of the widow with the tenor singer resulting in the discontinuance of diplomatic relations between the two nations) Europe forgot, after a few centuries, that such a place as Iceland ever existed. So, I say, it is most important to note, in tracing our history, that she daily recorded her actions and thoughts in a journal. It was an ordinary log of wall paper, rolled on a piece of broom handle, and the thoughts recorded in several places were so warm that many holes burnt in the parchment.

When she got ready she died, and the tenor whose name was Giovani Colombo, desiring to annex another wife, tossed the diary up in the garret with old hoopskirts, hasties, and other rubbish, and there it lay for fifteen or nineteen generations.

Like all other valuable things that are lost in the attic or musty cave, when the time came for the diary to be found it bobbed up serenely like a Jack-in-the-box. It is among these things that can remain hidden for years, generations and even centuries, waiting some one of destiny to come along and drag them out. I don't pretend to understand the philosophy of the case; some people insist that it isn't philosophy, that it is necromancy. I will study it out some time in the future and write you about it. The son of destiny in this instance was none other than your old roommate, Christofo Colombo, who Americanized his name into Christopher Columbus.

Chris was a direct descendant of the tenor singer and Lief Erickson's widow. He was at this time a fine, able-bodied youth of 21, too strong for work and too handsome and proud to beg. He pushed a banana cart through the streets of his native city during the day and manipulated a grind-organ in the soft eventide. Between the two he managed to eke out a pretty fair livelihood for a dago.

One night it rained so hard Chris could not take the nerve-shaker out, and while the public was enjoying the blissful quiet, he felt that peculiar condition coming on, that "something" which drives heroines to the haunted cave and heroes to the mouldy attic. Chris lighted a candle, stuck it in a potato and went upon a voyage of discovery. He was looking for money, but he had to be content with a broken bobby horse, a tattered pair of hoopskirts and the diary above mentioned.

He was immensely tickled over this latter article, and while appreciating the burning condemned imparted to the journal by his now very much defunct ancestress, he was most interested in the accounts of her travels, and those of her Swede husband and lover. He had a little of the emigrant blood in his veins. Immediately his head became filled with strange ideas concerning this far country. His friends said he was "buggy;" maybe he was—some dagoes are very careless.

Chris, Columbus serenading the Spanish Queen.

Chris became so infatuated with his day dreams that he got a-head-minded; he would actually hand cmal change to a man who had purchased a dozen bananas, and he had been known to play the same piece half-a-dozen times on the old-jammer and forget to take up a collection before moving on.

After a while he gave up his revenue-producing occupations and went to writing essays and posing as a scholar. He had a globe made on which he traced outlines representing the known world and on every other side he made a great big "?". He knew that India was a long journey to the east and that not much money in science and for had gone there by a western route. He tried to tell this to Chris, but found he wouldn't have it, and as they began to talk about upping him up, Chris decided it was time to slope. He went to Spain.

That should have been a fatal facte evidence that he was bughouse; but as he had left Italy the dagoes didn't care, and of course the Spaniards felt complimented by the arrival of even a crazy dago scientist.

There is not much money in science and Chris soon found he would have to work on the side or abandon the science business altogether. The fruit stand has no place in Spain and Chris' idea of the eternal fitness of things revolted at the idea of a son of Italy peddling hot 'amales. The hand-organ was not popular, so Chris bought a second-hand guitar from a pawnshop and learned the Spanish fandango.

One night while out earning a few pesetas he strolled into a beautiful garden, and pausing under a window casement, assaulted the atmosphere with his horrible interpretation of the fandango and anon caroled a dago love song. When he had finished he looked about for someone to donate the price of a macaroni stew, and perceived just above him the face of a beautiful woman.

Spain had at that time several beautiful women. They have none now, or if they have an American should not admit it.

Chris doffed his sky-piece and waited for the money to drop, but the senora only smiled and threw him a kiss.

"Nice da kiss, but no eats da kiss," he murmured in a deprecating tone.

"Thy music hath charmed me, gentle sir, and I fain would listen by the hour, but the king, my husband, hath a jag which he is now sleeping off. If panchas he should waken and hear thy serenade, thy head would decorate mine breakfast table and would not have fit happen thus, for thy heavenly music hath entranced me, thy soulful voice and handsome mug hath awakened strange emotions in mine heart."

It will be noticed that I give the queen's words in English and Chris' in dago-English. I could give the Spanish-American twist to the queen's conversation, but I will not. I am not anything Spanish and you should too if you are a loyal American.

"Ola! me panks da mash," murmured Chris to himself.

"Pray, what is thy name, gentle sir?" asked the queen.

"Christofo Colombo."

"The great Italian scientist? How lovely. I have read of thee. Thou must come to court tomorrow."

"No likka da piece court," grunted Chris, "no, not-the police court. I mean pers sent thyself before the throne and meet the king."

"No likka meet him; likka meet you," said Chris, with a knowing leer.

"I will see thee then, and who can tell how oft we may meet after that. Adios."

"Good-by, sweetheart—au revoir."

They kissed their finger tips at each other, Chris backed away like a blind horse hitched to a mud cart. He fell backward into a flower bed, then rolled over onto his guitar; the delicate instrument yielded up the ghost with a crash while Chris swore long and softly.

He didn't exactly know that a fellow who could carry on a flirtation with a queen would have to be a peach without any flies on him, but he knew he would proceed to add the cause of science if he was smooth with the flirtation, and he was going to be his "Hints on Flirtation," to be found in every bachelor's apartments, bears silent witness.

Questions for the Student.—Did Adam like the apple Eve gave him? Which would you rather; be in love or have dyspepsia? Why? How many bananas did Chris sell for a nickel? Give a recipe for making hot tamales. Play the Spanish fandango. Were you in the Spanish war? If not, why?

(To be continued next week.)

AGENTS WANTED

Easily Earned

Stevens Watches, Clocks, Sewing Machines, Furniture, Sinks, Organs, Pianos, Bicycles, Tea Sets, etc., etc., etc., distributed by a few hours' work introducing Dr. Louis Stevens' Celebrated Kidney Cure. No money required. Write for catalogue of over 1,000 premiums and particulars. Address

SULLIVAN, WARD & CO., 358-362 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention This Chicago Ledger.

LADIES WANTED to take up stamping at home. We pay Hoopskirt Steel with learning. H. F. JONES, Dept. F., Brooklyn, N.Y.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WANTED LADY AGENTS for CORSETS and FINE SATEEN CORSE-SKIRTS. Popular and Fast Selling. No Lasts Issued. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Honorable genteel WORK either sex; no canvassing; $3 per day sure. Address, Supporting Dept. 5, 60 W. 18th St., N.Y.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$75 Month and Expenses; no experience required; position permanent; self-seller. PEASE MFG. CO., State C, Cincinnati, O.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

EXQUISITE RINGS FREE

We will give a handsome, solid gold finished rose warranted for any person who will write us and mail 10 cents to help pay postage and packing. You will receive it by return mail and we will send you our FREE CATALOGUE containing 1,000 other Rings, Watches, Jewelry, Novelties, etc. Address, 100 Tissue St., Room 6, CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

GROCERY AND CLOTHING SALESMAN WANTED

Salary $75 per month and expenses. Permanent position. Steady work. Address, with stamp, SCHICKLER & CO., Dept. B, CHICAGO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

AGENTS. Write every man or woman a Solid Gold Ring, Stone Cameo or Garnet, Diamond Cross Ring, which we will put back in your pocket if not satisfactory. It's solid gold, Warranted and accepted for beauty, brilliancy and durability. We give it free for dispensing of 20 packages of our Magic Laundry Blue at 10c a box. Simply send name and address and we will mail the blue and you sell it among your friends at 10c a box; money when sold, send us $2 and we will send you the ring at once, prepaid. We take purchasers back if they desire. Address, Mail & Express Co., 26 Park Row, New York.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WATCH, CHAIN and CHARM FREE

We send this nickel plated watch, and a chain and charm to boys and girls for selling 20 packages of our elegant sachet powders at 10c each. Send us your name and address by return mail, and we will send you the sachet powders. When sold send us the money as per agreement and we will send you the watch, chain and charm free of charge, prepaid. No money required. ARMS MFG. CO., St. Louis, Mo.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

AGENTS WANTED

OLD RAGS!

We ship you Rugs, Carpets, Portieres, Lace Curtains, Draperies, Clothing, Feathers, Furs, Hides, Tallow, Rubber, Metals, Rags, Etc., and pay the highest cash prices. Write for our Catalogue and Price List. Sent free. Ship your goods to us and we will pay you

THE CHICAGO LEDGER

26 YEARS OLD.

Published Every Saturday.

BY

W. D. BOYCE CO.

All communications should be addressed to

THE CHICAGO LEDGER,
113, 115, 117 DEARBORN ST.,
Chicago, Illinois.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Chicago Weekly Ledger One Year	1.00
Six Months	25

(IN ADVANCE.)

Remittance should be made by Bank Draft, Registered Letter, Post Office or Express Money Order, payable to THE CHICAGO LEDGER.

One Dollar must be added to all foreign yearly subscriptions to pay postage.

For sale by Newsdealers, Postmasters and Subscription Agents.

Entered at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, as Second-class matter.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER AND SATURDAY BLADE.

ADVERTISING.

Advertising Rate $1.10 per Agate line, for insertion for advertisements in The Chicago Ledger and Saturday Blade combined.

500,000

COPIES WEEKLY

PROVED CIRCULATION.

BACK NUMBERS.

Back numbers of the Ledger can be had by addressing this office. Always give the number, date, and volume, if you can, accompanied by your full address, and your order will receive prompt attention. Price 5 cents per copy.

BEWARE OF STRANGERS.

The Ledger employs no traveling agents to solicit subscriptions, and every person soliciting in that capacity is a fraud. Do not pay money to strangers. Subscribers to The Ledger whose time or any part of it has expired, in villages where they have been appointed agents to sell this paper every week, a discount will be made to them in order that with enable us to accept and receive such persons as are now traveling from town to town in different sections of this country, claiming to be agents of The Ledger and thereby defrauding the people. Beware of strangers.

TWENTY TRUSTS A WEEK.

Trusts are being financed in Wall street at the rate of twenty a week. Nearly every article of food, clothing and luxury has been placed under the control of these industrial combinations since May 1. The street is flooded with the common stock of these greatly over-capitalized corporations.

The same scheme has been followed in the organization of every one of them. The plants are bought at a price which companies are bought at extravagant prices by the score of 7 per cent culminative stock, and an enormous issue of common stock on which the promoters do not expect to pay dividends, is distributed among the insiders as a bonus. They, in turn, unload it in Wall street, whence it is turned over to the public, which is awakening to waterloaning.

Stock exchange hopses are now declining to buy the industrial stocks for their customers on margin, because the public refuse to lend money on them as collateral and the brokers are unwilling to tie their own money up in them.

Wall street has again busied itself with "trust" making, and the details of the plan to form a $50,000,000 Champagne Trust are made public.

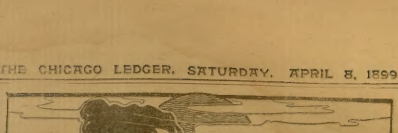
Some of the trusts of the week are:

	Capital.
Champagne Trust	$50,000,000
Forged Steel Trust	10,000,000
Oil Stove Trust	6,000,000
Fish and Game Trust	1,000,000
Varnish Trust	1,000,000
Threshing Machine Trust	30,000,000
Paper Bottle Trust	10,000,000
Banana Trust	1,000,000
Window Glass Trust	10,000,000
Paint Trust	12,000,000

Italy's seizure of San Mun bay is having a marked effect in crystallizing the Chinese situation. For Americans the most significant fact is that it has compelled President McKinley to take a stand on the question of the partition of China. Italy sent a note to each of the great powers, including the United States, sounding them as to their attitude on the proposed seizure of San Mun bay and on the partition of China in general. The president is said to have replied deprecating Italy's act and announcing that the United States would take no part in the dismemberment of China unless American commercial interests were seen to be imperiled.

A baking powder trust has been formed in New Jersey. It is to be hoped there is no alum, water, or other deleterious substance in the stock.

By this time the remorseful Agoncillo is probably regarding himself as the Alger of his nation.



BILLY OF BATTERY B.

BY COLGATE BAKER.

I.

It was in the hush of those quiet hours after daybreak, when the golden sunshine fell aslant through the skylight over the rows of stalls, when the oats were finished, and the only sound was the rustle or sweet-smelling hay—from which the dust floated upward into the yellow blocks of light above and filled it with dancing motes—that Billy and Bob had their most confidential chats. It was then that Billy had plotted out to them the pitfalls and snares that beset every young fellow entered horse in the service, and was clearly shown the error of his way; and it was then that he poured into the ears of Bob, that hardened old campaigner, all the yearnings and ambitions of his immature childhood.

All day long a white-haired old major-general, who had led his corps through the Wilderness, on his long circuits of a hill, and watched cavalry charge solid lines of infantry in the teeth of mowing machine fire, and infantry in their turn walk calmly up to the belching muzzles of the battery guns. There was a very weary look on the old general's face, it was one of those days they call "field-days," and according to the instructions issued on little slips of white and brown paper the conditions of actual warfare are to be simulated as far as possible, and all the "regulations" result in is noisy bawling of orders, dust, heat, confusion, and a great deal of disgust on the part of officers, men and horses. At noon, however, the general's face wore a pleasant smile, and from the battery enveloped in a seething cloud of dust, rolled over the plain, and up the slope heads among the Indians were seconding their efforts to prevent a fruitless shedding of blood. But these efforts had been made too late, for the fever of war was in the hot blood of the young Sioux braves. Already there had been killing done, and new-made graves studded the fast-whitening winter prairie. Sitting Bull had been shot while resisting arrest, and his followers were mad with desire for revenge, while the government had decreed a general disarming of the Sioux.

Down at the end of the agency camp was a small detachment from Battery B—two guns and fifteen men, and picketed near by in the chill of the storm, shivered under their canvas covers, were Billy and Bob, with about a dozen of the battery boys.

"Wot's ther use of our bloomin' guns out 'ere, I'd like ter know?" said Driver Burke to his comrades in the snow-bound tent. "Chasin' Injuns with cannon is the wust confoundedness I ever 'eard of. But we must judge Driver Burke leniently, for when a soldier is quartered out on a frozen prairie in what seems to him a purposeless way, all things look foolish.

Then up piped a pallid recruit from under a pile of blankets: "Now, that they got th' bull outfit of 'em surrounded, they ought ter let us go 'ome an' get warm-sure." This brought a smile to the wizard, weather-beaten face of the old sergeant to charge, who was smoking his pipe, and refusing to allow himself to be otherwise than cheerful and contented.

"If you fellers would stop studyin' the conduk of the campaign an' the akshuns of the non-commissioned officer, you'd be better off," interrupted the sergeant. "You ain't gettin' thirteen dollars a month for ter advise the major-general. All you got ter do is ter obey orders an' keep your fuses closed, an' I think if you go out an' hustle up a pile of wood for fernight, you'd feel better."

While that conversation was going on inside of Battery B's tent, down at headquarters the major-general was listening to the broken, ungrammatical story of a pale, half-frozen orderly with a bloody bandage tied around his head.

The message was short and very pressing. When the soldier finished he was dismissed, and the gray-haired veteran general turned and asked his aide if there were any mounted troops in camp.

The Lieutenant sent the shrapnel into the camp of the Indians

"No, sir," was the answer. "The cavalry is all with the Seventh, and the nearest detachment."

The general thought of the fifteen long miles between the camp and place where succor was needed so badly, of the trail heavy with snow, and he sighed for the absent cavalry. Then he thought of the quiet, little detachment of B Battery, who had been chafing at the useless role he had been forced to play in the campaign and had repeatedly solicited permission to show what his little Hotchkiss guns could do in settling matters with the Sioux, and he remembered the slashing big bay horses that the battery was so proud of.

"Send for Lieut. Darge Captain," was his order to the silent aide.

When the battery commander received the message he ran hurriedly to headquarters, in glad anticipation of being given some work to do, and his first look at the stern anxious face of his chief told him what it was.

"The —th are having a row with Big Foot's band down on Wounded Knee Creek. They need help, and I have nothing left here that could reach them soon enough. Do you think [illegible] can make it, Darge?" [illegible]

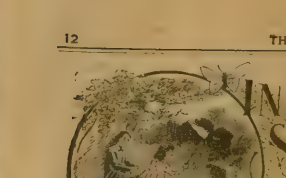
"I should [illegible]

"You need [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[



THE SCHOOLBOY CADETS

Fun and Mystery at Washington Hall---Barry Powell's Victories and Adventures and How Hoke Ummer Fought and Fell.

By ROY ROCKWOOD.

(Copyrighted, 1899.)

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCING THE SCHOOLBOY CADETS

"Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!"

What on earth is that racket, Lem?"

"Don't you know, Tom? I'm to be a boarding school—just the prettiest place in the face of the earth."

"I never knowed as how a boarding school was a pretty place," was the comment of old Tom Barnstable, one of the best-known individuals in Raytown district.

"Oh, but you don't understand, Tom. It's a military school that I am going—Washington Hall, up the Hudson—the same place that Link Harmer attends."

"Oh, that's it! Well, I hope you learn a heap and keep out of mischief, Barry Powell. I've heard tell that they cut up some pretty high didoes at them military schools—hazin', they call it."

"Yes, I wouldn't have anybody, not me," replied Barry, solemnly, with a sly twinkle in his deep brown eyes. "You never knew me to do anything wrong, did you now, Tom?"

"Oh, no, not at all," ejaculated Tom Barnstable sarcastically. "But if you didn't, ye hid the cow into Squire Borden's dining room, and who stuffed the musical instruments of the brass band with sawdust at the Fourth of July celebration? You never do anything, you little innocent lamb."

And with a loud guffaw, the old character sauntered down the street toward his favorite resort, the general store.

Barry Powell sauntered on his way. He was a handsome youth of fifteen, tall and square-shouldered, with a taking way about him that made him a host of friends. He was the only son of Mrs. Lucy Powell, a rich widow.

A moment after leaving Tom Barnstable, Barry reached the home of his particular chum, Lincoln Harmer. Throwing open the gate, he cleared Link in the barnyard, and made a rush forward.

"Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!

"That settles it, Barry; you're going with me next term!" exclaimed Link, a bright fellow of our hero's age.

"If I wasn't, I'd sing a dirge instead of shouting, Link. Yes, it's all settled, and I'll be ready to start with you Monday."

"Your mother has written to Captain Hooper?"

"Yes, and got word back in today's mail."

"Good!"

"I'm busy a lot of things down to Carley's store and then go home and start to pack. Come on—walk down."

Arm in arm, the two chums made their way to the large general store, where Tom Barnstable was again disconsolate, and Barry purchased some extra underclothing his mother said he needed. While he was at this Tom Barnstable came close to him

"When are ye goin' away, Barry

"Monday morning, 6 o'clock."

"Don't forget the old man, Barry. We've had a lot of good times—hehhs' an' huntin', ye know."

That was Tom Barnstable, good-natured and willing to do, but an absolute beggar at the slightest chance.

"I won't forget you, Tom, not I," said Barry. "Here you are," and he slipped a shining dollar into the old man's hand. A moment later he called one of the store clerks aside.

"Have you any of those April fool cigars left?" he whispered.

"Yes—just four."

"I'll take them."

The cigars bought and paid for, Barry put three of them in his inside pocket, and then turned the fourth over to Tom Barnstable.

"Here, Tom, put the cigar away and have a good Havana to celebrate the parting," he said, and the old man immediately did as requested.

The cigar burnt all right for just half a minute or more, then something began to bulge at the end. It kept growing larger and larger, finally forming what is called a Pharaoh's serpent, three or four feet long.

Tom Barnstable's eyes began to blaze. He stared at Barry without a word.

"Who—what—what is that?" he stammered, "Great Scott! I've got 'em!"

And dashing the weed to the floor, he fled from the country store, with Barry's laugh ringing in his ears.

"He'll remember it now, no doubt of that!" said Link, merrily.

The day was Saturday, and it was a busy one for Barry Powell, for his mother insisted that all arrangements should be completed before Sunday.

The Sabath passed quietly, and 8 o'clock Monday saw Link up and ready for the trip that beautiful river which had justly been called the Rhine of America.

The train that was to take the two chums to New York came in but a few minutes later. Then followed a general handshaking, and Mrs. Powell kissed her son warmly.

"Take good care of yourself, Barry, and keep out of trouble," she called on parting, and he waved his hand and smiled, and then the train moved off.

The run to the metropolis was a short one, and once there the steamboat landing was quickly reached.

"There is the Brosnan and Hoke Ummer!" cried Link. "Two of our fellows."

The new cadets were quickly introduced. Ike Brosnan looked a whole-souled fellow and full of fun. Hoke Ummer, on the other hand, seemed of a decidedly morose disposition.

"Hoke is a good deal of a bully," whispered Link, later on. "You want to steer clear of him."

"Thanks; he'll not step on my toes," returned Barry, but the first week was written to tease or bully me will get his fingers burnt."

"Oh, the boys will be sure to want a little fun," Barry. "But I mustn't be too particular."

"I don't mean that, Barry. Don't you go too far," replied Barry Powell.

There were 300 cadets at Washington Hall, and larks to be played are that school term should be over.

The journey up the river was devoid of any special incident. The sail was magnificent, and all enjoyed it hugely.

Toward nightfall a landing was made not many miles from Garrison, and the boys took a long stage was in waiting to take them to the school. Mounting along with a dozen others, got aboard, and they moved off rapidly for Washington Hall, two miles distant.

CHAPTER II.

A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

Washington Hall was a large building of brick, situated on the summit of the top of a small hill. In front was a level parade ground, and on each side the grounds sloped down to the edge of a small lake, on the other it was flanked by a heavy wood.

The institution was well managed by Captain Hooker, an ex-army officer, who looked to the intellectual drill of the boys and left the educational department to an able corps of assistants. With many regrets and the gallant captain himself we will become better acquainted as our tale proceeds.

Barry Powell soon became acquainted with nearly all of the one hundred and odd boys who attended Washington Hall, and became the leader of a set composed of himself, Link Harmer, Ike Mumps, a big youth, and Sam Schump, a German pupil, as good-natured as can be, only he limited.

As soon as the boys arrived they were assigned to their places. Barry was put in the room with the crowd above mentioned. This room was connected with another, in which were installed the bully, Hoke Ummer; Bill Grout, Barry's neighbor, and all a dozen of the bully's crew.

"This room will get into a free fight with that gang some day," was Barry's comment, after Schump, the German boy, had related how the bully treated him.

"Dot's it, mine gracious," replied Sam Schump. "We vill git togedder an' show dem vot we can do, ain't

Several days were spent in getting ready for the term. Barry was assigned to the first class, with twenty others, and he was likewise put in an awkward squad to learn the steps and manual of arms.

As luck would have it, Barry was placed under one of the assistant instructors, and fared very well. Piggy Mumps was put in a squad under Hoke Ummer, and he did all he could to make the fat boy miserable.

"Eyes right! Eyes left! Front!" shouted Hoke, "I'll make the whole crew of you fellows added to poor Piggy, who was in a sweat to do as ordered.

"Vot you say, eyes right an' den eyes left, ven da eyes right is eyes left, eyes left, eyes right.

"Silence! Eyes right! Eyes left! You, you, you can't you twist your eyes, or are you too fat?" roared Hoke.

"Don't vos call me a klown, you—you unchelienated—you—you—you—" Piggy began, when without warning Hoke fell upon him with both fists flying.

This was too much for Piggy, and he ran up, fat and all, and closed with the bully. But he was no match for the big youth, and Piggy would have been severely punished had not Barry Powell stepped in the middle and hurled backwards against a wall.

"Stop that, you bully!" was the voice of Barry Powell. "You have no right to touch Piggy, and you know it."

"Haven't I, though?" sneered the bully. "Do you suppose I'm going to be made a fool of by a—a—a flat like that? You clear out, or I'll give you a dose, too!"

"You can't give me any time you please," replied Barry, quietly.

"Then take it!" exclaimed half a dozen at once, and the awkward squad was broken up in a general fight.

"A fight?" repeated the bully. "He'll get a thrashing—that's all it will amount to. Come on, fellows, if you want to, and I'll have it out."

Not willing to meet you," returned Barry, and started along, followed by Piggy, Link, and a dozen others.

But scarcely had the boys gone a rod before the belfry bell rang out loudly five times.

That was a signal for assembly on the parade ground.

Hoke [illegible] Barry [illegible] Hoke [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"Hoke is knocked out!"

"Did you ever see such a blow!"

Wild with rage, the bully was assisted to his feet by several friends.

The blood flowed from his chin and from a cut lip.

"I'll show you yet!" he hissed.

And he again went at Barry.

But our hero was cool and collected, while the bully was excited.

The bully got in one little body blow, but that was all, while our hero fairly played all over his face.

"Better give it up, Hoke!"

"You are outclassed against Barry Powell!"

"Let me be!" howled the bully.

With every blow that our hero delivered Ummer's anger increased.

His reputation, he felt, was at stake.

If he was beaten, that would be the end of him, so far as bossing the boys was concerned.

At last Barry hit him a stinging blow in the ear that caused him to roll over and over.

CHAPTER IV.

OUT ON THE LAKE.

The bully was knocked out completely and had to acknowledge Barry the victor of the encounter.

This he did with very bad grace, and a minute later sneaked off with his toady.

"I'll get even for that," he growled. "He'll be sorry he ever tackled me."

"You'll have to watch Hoke Ummer, Barry," said Link, some time later, when the crowd had dispersed. "He is a treacherous fellow."

"I'll have my eyes open," returned our hero.

Yet little did he dream of the dastardly way in which the bully would try to get even.

It did not take Barry Powell long to settle down at Washington Hall. The fight had made him many friends and established him as a sort of leader among a certain set.

On the following Saturday Link proposed they hire a boat on the lake and go fishing. Barry readily agreed and they went off, taking their fishing lines with them.

For a while they hired an old sailboat called the Bunker Hill. She was manned by an old sailor named Snuff.

There was an island in the lake and after some discussion it was decided to sail around it, the island of the island and try bass fishing, for which the lake was famous.

The lines were soon cast off and the sailboat was off to sea, and as soon as they caught the breeze they swung around and down the lake at speed of seven knots an hour.

Somebody else out besides ourselves," observed Snuff, as he pointed to half a dozen sailboats cruising around. "This year seems to be a has the boating craze."

"It's great sport," returned Link. "By the by, he went on, pointing to a large yacht not very far off, "there is a long yacht. What boat is that?"

"She's called the Corker. I don't know who owns her," was the old boatkeeper's reply.

"She is coming over this way. Let us head out a little and see who is on board."

"Just as you say, sir."

"Yes, I'm curious about that yacht, too," put in Barry.

The course of the Bunker Hill was altered several points and they left the vicinity of the island shore. As they drew closer to the big yacht our hero uttered a cry of astonishment.

"By Jinks! It can't be possible!"

"What's up?" asked Link, coming to his side.

"There are Hoke Ummer and Bill Goul on board. Well, we won't have any words with them."

"I would like to know where they got that yacht," said Link.

"Bullies they are coming this way!"

Barry sprang up in alarm, for the big yacht had suddenly veered around several points and was now coming head on toward them.

"We'll be run down!" shrieked Snuff, in terror.

"The fools!" muttered Link. "Don't they know anything about steering?"

"The big yacht is evidently one too many for them. See, there is no one aboard but Hoke and Goul. Two hands are not enough for such a craft."

Nearer and nearer the two yachts came to each other.

Snuff did his best to steer clear of the Corker, but he was at a disadvantage. Soon the big yacht took away all the wind of the Bunker Hill, and she lay helpless.

"Keep off!" yelled Barry, but the cry was unheeded.

Bang! Crash! The Corker struck the Bunker Hill off the bow, the long bowsprit ripping a hole in the mainsail.

Then came a smashing of woodwork, and the boat containing Link and our hero began to sink!

This very interesting story of schoolboy adventures will be continued next week. The Ledger makes a special subscription offer on page thirteen.

She—Why did you lose your temper so unfortunately at the game of cards?

He—It was the only thing left I had to lose.

Then out shot his fist and the bully got a crushing blow on the chin.

The White Man's Burden

Is paying rent for a poor farm. Now is the time to secure a good farm on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in Marinette County, Wisconsin, where land is cheap, but rich, work plenty, fine the crops are of the best, excellent climate, pure soft water, good schools, excellent climate, pure soft water, good schools and on long time. Why land so cheap and on long time. Why not get a farm when you can get one for less than you pay for rent? Address C. K. Roberts, Land Agent, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Done to a Turn.

"That new story of yours, Scribbler, appears to me to lack crispness."

"Exactly, stranger. I'm sure it's been roasted enough.

Boy's Secret Society—Membership Free.

Any boy can form a Secret Society under 21 years; original and only secret song for boys under 21 years of age. It has grips, passwords, badges, secret emblems, secret signals, funny initiations, etc., and nothing to it to do. Don't wait for new law, and be nothing to it to do. Don't wait for new law, and be nothing to it to do. Don't wait for new law, and be and the two men put their shoulders to the limber and started the piece uphill once more. Four hundred yards up the terrible grade Billy pulled that gun for them, at every step digging his wounded off front leg into the sharp shale and jagged ice of the mountain trail; but his agony and pain were nearly over. At the brow of the divide they looked down into the valley where the fight was going on.

BILLY OF BATTERY B.

(Continued from page eleven.)

Below them a thin blue skirmish line, stretched out in a crescent, was replying feebly to the rapid and destructive fire of the Indians, sheltered in their village and in the commanding ground on the other side. There were many silent guns in the blue skirmish-line, and the ground between it and the Indians was scattered with right blue-clad forms and the stiff tawny figures of dead Sioux.

If the authors of the "Drill Regulations for Light Artillery" could have seen that gun, drawn by a horse on three legs, and manned by an officer and two privates, go "into battery" on the brow of that hill, they would have marveled greatly.

The limber did not come around on a gallop, by a left traverse—as the book says it should—but the gun was in position just as quickly as if it had; for two men had drawn the pin and uncoupled the trail-piece from the limber before they halted. They ran the gun out "by hand" to the brink, while the Heaviest-of-all-mutilated pow-der-monkey—dug deep into the limber chest and filled his arms full of long thin shrapnel shells.

Billy, tottering on three legs behind them, saw everything—the breech opened, the cartridge pushed home, and the breech closed and locked. He saw the lieutenant down on his knees adjusting the sights, and pointing the piece with exact nicety at a swarm of Sioux behind the tepees in the village.

Driver Burke stood with his knees bent and the lanyard taut in his hand, impatient for the word. In a low, firm tone it came, "Fire!" A long tongue of flame shot from it, then a blast of white cloudy smoke, and, after a distinct pause, the sharp detonation rang out and deafened them. Straining forward, they saw the shell burst over the village, and tepees, blankets, ponies and Indians seemed to be struck by a tornado. Then they sent shell after shell shrieking over the valley into the village and the Indian position. The hissing wail of the twisting shrapnel as they flew through the air had a most terrifying effect on the Sioux. They thought they heard the voices of the dead they had killed and tortured crying out for vengeance.

As if hurried on by the ghosts of the departed, swiftly and silently every Indian withdrew, and nothing was left below to fire at but a mass of shifting wreckage.

Cheer on cheer came ringing up from the rescued regiment below, but the lieutenant and the two exhausted men lying flat on the ground by the side of the recking gun did not hear them. Their eyes were fastened on a gaunt haggard horse swaying to and fro on three legs, his soft pleading eyes swimming with pain.

A look flashed on the lieutenant's face that made his hard features tender and womanly. Then it was that Driver Burke, the worst blackguard in the battery, spoke his mind.

"That's a horse as is a horse, an 'e ought to'ave a medal as big as 'ere moon."

The lieutenant looked at Driver Burke, and a bond of sympathy was established between them right there and then. The other man was dumb as an oyster, but he never took his staring wet eyes off Billy.

"'Ere' ain't no such thing as givin' a horse a wooden leg," said Burke, meditatively, "an' the kindest thing we can do is ter do our duty." And they did.

According to Burke, Billy's shiny brown eyes thanked him as he fired.

"If there is any horse's heaven" says Burke, "where they does nothin' but play on their blue-grass meadows amongst the daisies all day long—you'll find Billy there."

They were all given medals of honor, every member of that gun detachment; but among themselves they often say that, "he who most deserved a medal never received one"—meaning, of course, Billy of Battery B.—Harper's Round Table.

What People Say about Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it cures when all other remedies fail. Therefore you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla in preference to all others.

Hood's Pills cure biliousness. Mailed for 25 cents by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Not Clear.

"You say," remarked the lawyer, "that the prisoner pointed the revolver as though intending to blow out the dead man's brains. What do you mean? Here is a revolver. Now, show me how you would point it to blow out my brains."

"I wouldn't attempt it," replied the witness ambiguously.

Eighty-One Hemorrhages!

"I had eighty-one hemorrhages, sometimes spitting five pints of blood at one time." That's the statement made by Cornelius McCawley, Leechburg, Armstrong Co., Penn. He continues: "My doctor did all he could for me, but could not stop the hemorrhages, and all gave me up to die of consumption."

Mr. McCawley didn't die. He's well and working. He found means to stop the hemorrhages. He read an advertisement like this one. It had a testimonial in it from Mr. C. H. Harris, who'd been cured of a similar ailment by the use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He wrote to Mr. Harris—to quote his own language: "I sat down and wrote to him describing my case."

What Mr. Harris Said

"I got a letter from Mr. Harris, saying: 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery saved my life,' and advising me to try it."

R. V. PIERCE, M. D.

What the Local Doctor Said

"I told my doctor that I would try 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and he said, 'You might as well take water.'"

What Mr. McCawley Said

"I thought it was only DIE anyway, so I wrote to Dr. Pierce, and commenced the use of the 'Discovery.'"

What Dr. Pierce Said

"When I had taken six bottles, I had eight bad hemorrhages. I wrote to Dr. Pierce, and he sent me word to keep on with the 'Discovery.'"

The Result

"That was over two years ago, and I have not had any bleeding since. I can truly say your medicine cured me. I am a walking, living advertisement for your grand medicine."

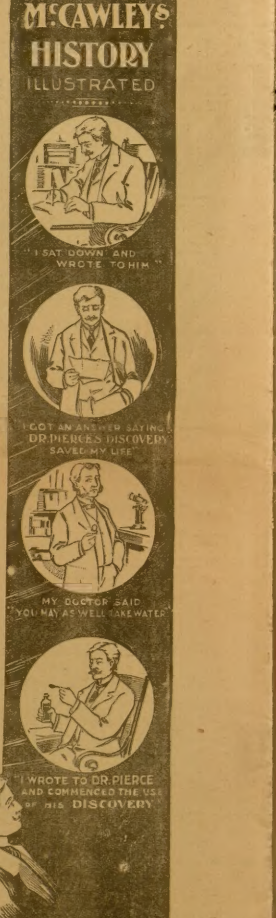
The Testimonial of C. H. Harris, Esq., N22 Second Avenue, Rock Island, Ills., to whom Mr. McCawley wrote.

"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery saved my life and has made me a man; my home-physician says I am good for forty years yet. My case was a case just between life and death, and all of my friends were sure it was a case of death, until I commenced taking a second bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' when I was able to sit up and the cough was very much better, and bleeding from my lungs stopped, and before I had taken six bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' my cough ceased and I was a new man and ready for business. 'Golden Medical Discovery' saved my life when doctors and all kinds of medicines failed to do me any good."

Not a word of comment is needed to strengthen the above facts. They are facts. They're strong enough. If they are not, they are supported by the testimonials of thousands who have been cured by "Golden Medical Discovery."

You can consult Dr. Pierce by letter FREE OF CHARGE. All correspondence confidential. Write to-day and get a Specialist's opinion on your case without fee or cost. Address:

DR. R. V. PIERCE, BUFFALO, N. Y.



McCAWLEY'S HISTORY ILLUSTRATED
"I SAT DOWN AND WROTE TO HIM"
"I GOT AN ANSWER SAYING DR. PIERCE'S DISCOVERY SAVED MY LIFE"
MY DOCTOR SAID "YOU MAY AS WELL TAKE WATER"
"I WROTE TO DR. PIERCE AND COMMENCED THE USE OF HIS DISCOVERY"

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago

A MARVELOUS WOMAN.

(Continued from page five.)

riveted upon his face. It was evident that but one thought, one desire possessed the dying man—his son's forgiveness, and, bending over him, Armande murmured:

"I forgive you, father; go at peace."

CHAPTER XXIII.

The afternoon sunlight, shimmering through the trees, and its pale yellow light upon a striking scene. A dozen gendarmes in glittering uniforms, closely surrounded four men, in dark, somber garments, whose faces were covered with a scarlet mask.

In the midst of the gendarmes was Armande de Kercheval, his face haggard and white, his brow dark, his eyes stern.

The gendarmes had silently surrounded the four bandits and cut off all escape. Realizing that resistance was useless they had surrendered.

"Ride forward, he who is the chief of the Scarlet Masks," cried the leader of the gendarmes.

One of the bandits touched with his spur the beautiful black horse he rode and the animal leaped forward.

"I am the chief of the Scarlet Masks," said the bandit.

Armande de Kercheval gave a quick start.

Before him, slender, erect, graceful, with curling black hair, was the counterpart of the young bandit whose heart his bullet had pierced. He could scarcely shook off the feeling of awe which crept over him, and rode forward until his horse faced that of the chief.

"I am Armande de Kercheval," he cried, "and I have brought to you this day to face to face with you and not shoot you, but I cannot shoot down a defenseless man, so I leave you to France and the—guillotine."

"No, Monsieur de Kercheval," replied the chief of the Scarlet Masks, "if you are as brave as report says, you will not leave the guillotine for your sister's sake to claim. You will fight me here and now," and, lifting his hand he struck Armande de Kercheval across the face with the riding whip he carried.

"It is your life or mine," cried Armande de Kercheval.

Then he turned to one of the gendarmes.

"Give him a pistol, he said, "then measure twenty paces."

The gendarme rode forward, handed a pistol to the chief of the Scarlet Masks.

Armande de Kercheval, with the red mark of the whip across the pallor of his face, sprang from his horse. The chief of the Scarlet Masks also alighted, and, for a moment, laid his hand caressingly upon the graceful, arched neck of the horse. Then he stepped forward and faced Armande de Kercheval.

Profound silence reigned. The eyes of the gendarmes and bandits were riveted upon the duelists. Armande de Kercheval, pale, handsome, his fine figure outlined against the dark background of the forest. The chief of the Scarlet Masks graceful, picturesque, in his somber garments, the scarlet mask making one bit of coloring, his black curling hair, under the sunlight, falling almost to his shoulders.

The gendarme who had measured off the distance, stood near the duelists, holding his horse by the bridle.

"Are you ready, gentlemen?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Armande de Kercheval, while the chief laughed his assent.

"One, two, three!" slowly, clearly called the gendarme.

Simultaneously two pistol shots rang out upon the air.

The chief of the Scarlet Masks reeled and fell to the ground, the blood gushing from a wound in his breast.

Armande de Kercheval stood erect, unharmed, but his face was white with a frown upon his brow. He had aimed straight at the heart of the chief, but the latter had deliberately fired into the air.

"Raise me," murmured the latter, faintly, and the gendarme obeyed.

The chief feebly lifted his hand and pulled the mask from his face. The man stepped a cry rang through the forest which no one had ever forgot, and the next moment Armande de Kercheval was kneeling beside the chief, his eyes full of astonishment and agony, looking down upon the beautiful white face.

"Heaven! My God! Helene!" he cried with colorless, quivering lips.

Her eyes, full of an immeasurable tenderness, looked up into his, a faint smile touched her perfect lips, upon which lay the pallor of death.

"Armande, my dear love," she whispered, and, with eyes still upon his face, died.

And at that moment there vibrated upon the air the first long strokes of a tolling bell. It came from the chapel in the Chateau de Kercheval. The Count de Kercheval was dead.

CHAPTER XXIV.

After his interview with Helene, Pedro saddled his horse and dashed wildly away from the retreat. The man had the instinct of the wild animal when wounded, to creep away and hide his agony from the eyes of men. He rode straight into the heart of the densest part of the forest.

There he remained for five days, subsisting upon the game which he killed, and fighting with the fiercest passions which possessed him. On the morning of the fifth day, which was on Sunday, pale, haggard and gaunt, he mounted his horse and rode slowly towards the retreat.

When he dismounted and swung back the bowsider he found himself gazing into the barrel of a rifle in the hands of one of the bandits. The next moment the bandit lowered his rifle, saying:

"Ah, 'tis you, Pedro."

"What is the meaning of this?" asked Pedro, as he led his horse past the bowsider and then swung it back in its place. "Why are you on guard here?"

"I know not, only know what has happened?" said the bandit.

"I know nothing," replied Pedro, impatiently.

"Then has been treachery here," said the bandit, "Fortescue has betrayed our chief."

A terrible oath left the lips of Pedro.

"Dead, is he?" he asked, and then he added, "She, Mademoiselle Helene, is dead."

"Ah, no, Pedro," replied the bandit, a fresh gathering on his livid lips. "She has not succeeded in that, for Fortescue, Pedro listened in utter silence, but livid with passion, and a terror even to the callous heart of the bandit.

When the latter had finished Pedro asked, in a strange voice:

"And the traitorous, where is she?"

"Devastated! It is not known that she would not be living now," replied the man, "but she made good her escape. On Friday morning she pretended to be unwell and kept to her room, watching an opportunity to escape. On Saturday she did not think of looking for her until after we learned that the Count de Kercheval was dead. At that time she was, of course, well out of the country."

Pedro's livid lips parted over his clenched teeth in an awful smile like the snarl of a wild animal. He was silent for a moment, and the bandit could not catch and locking his horse, walked away to attend to it.

A few minutes later Pedro strode into the hall of the retreat. He was perfectly composed to the bandit, ready at a moment's notice to make a desperate resistance against invasion or surprise.

For a moment Pedro looked around upon the dark and gloomy apartments, the scarlet mask making one bit of coloring, his white face another, under the sombre hat, falling almost to his shoulders.

The gendarme who had measured off the distance, stood near the duelists, holding his horse by the bridle.

"Are you ready, gentlemen?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Armande de Kercheval, while the chief laughed his assent.

"One, two, three!" slowly, clearly called the gendarme.

Simultaneously two pistol shots rang out upon the air.

The chief of the Scarlet Masks reeled and fell to the ground, the blood gushing from a wound in his breast.

Armande de Kercheval stood erect, unharmed, but his face was white with a frown upon his brow. He had aimed straight at the heart of the chief, but the latter had deliberately fired into the air.

"Raise me," murmured the latter, faintly, and the gendarme obeyed.

The chief feebly lifted his hand and pulled the mask from his face. The man uttered a cry rang through the forest which no one had ever forgot, and the next moment Armande de Kercheval was kneeling beside the chief, his eyes full of astonishment and agony, looking down upon the beautiful white face.

"Heaven! My God! Helene!" he cried with colorless, quivering lips.

Her eyes, full of an immeasurable tenderness, looked up into his, a faint smile touched her perfect lips, upon which lay the pallor of death.

"Armande, my dear love," she whispered, and, with eyes still upon his face, died.

And at that moment there vibrated upon the air the first long strokes of a tolling bell. It came from the chapel in the Chateau de Kercheval. The Count de Kercheval was dead.

CHAPTER XXIV.

After his interview with Helene, Pedro saddled his horse and dashed wildly away from the retreat. The man had the instinct of the wild animal when wounded, to creep away and hide his agony from the eyes of men. He rode straight into the heart of the densest part of the forest.

There he remained for five days, subsisting upon the game which he killed, and fighting with the fiercest passions which possessed him. On the morning of the fifth day, which was on Sunday, pale, haggard and gaunt, he mounted his horse and rode slowly towards the retreat.

When he dismounted and swung back the bowsider he found himself gazing into the barrel of a rifle in the hands of one of the bandits. The next moment the bandit lowered his rifle, saying:

"Ah, 'tis you, Pedro."

"What is the meaning of this?" asked Pedro, as he led his horse past the bowsider and then swung it back in its place. "Why are you on guard here?"

"I know not, only know what has happened?" said the bandit.

"I know nothing," replied Pedro, impatiently.

"Then has been treachery here," said the bandit, "Fortescue has betrayed our chief."

A terrible oath left the lips of Pedro.

"Dead, is he?" he asked, and then he added, "She, Mademoiselle Helene, is dead."

"Ah, no, Pedro," replied the bandit, a fresh gathering on his livid lips. "She has not succeeded in that, for Fortescue, Pedro listened in utter silence, but livid with passion, and a terror even to the callous heart of the bandit.

When the latter had finished Pedro asked, in a strange voice:

"And the traitorous, where is she?"

"Devastated! It is not known that she would not be living now," replied the man, "but she made good her escape. On Friday morning she pretended to be unwell and kept to her room, watching an opportunity to escape. On Saturday she did not think of looking for her until after we learned that the Count de Kercheval was dead. At that time she was, of course, well out of the country."

Pedro's livid lips parted over his clenched teeth in an awful smile like the snarl of a wild animal. He was silent for a moment, and the bandit could not catch and locking his horse, walked away to attend to it.

A few minutes later Pedro strode into the hall of the retreat. He was perfectly composed to the bandit, ready at a moment's notice to make a desperate resistance against invasion or surprise.

For a moment Pedro looked around upon the dark and gloomy apartments, the scarlet mask making one bit of coloring, his white face another, under the sombre hat, falling almost to his shoulders.

The gendarme who had measured off the distance, stood near the duelists, holding his horse by the bridle.

"Are you ready, gentlemen?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Armande de Kercheval, while the chief laughed his assent.

"One, two, three!" slowly, clearly called the gendarme.

Simultaneously two pistol shots rang out upon the air.

The chief of the Scarlet Masks reeled and fell to the ground, the blood gushing from a wound in his breast.

Armande de Kercheval stood erect, unharmed, but his face was white with a frown upon his brow. He had aimed straight at the heart of the chief, but the latter had deliberately fired into the air.

"Raise me," murmured the latter, faintly, and the gendarme obeyed.

The chief feebly lifted his hand and pulled the mask from his face. The man uttered a cry rang through the forest which no one had ever forgot, and the next moment Armande de Kercheval was kneeling beside the chief, his eyes full of astonishment and agony, looking down upon the beautiful white face.

"Heaven! My God! Helene!" he cried with colorless, quivering lips.

"Oh, God!" she murmured, "am I going mad? I thought I saw Pedro's face looking down there in the crowd, uplifted, with the awful eyes fixed upon me. 'Tis only my imagination, I suppose, and again have I, in fancy, seen that same dark face, the same eyes, and heard the same cry. Ah, heaven! In this one year I have lived a hundred years in agony. I have suffered all that mortal can suffer. I have never known a moment's peace. Oh, the intolerable anguish of living always a hundred lives!"

She rested her aching brow on her hand and her thoughts went back ten years, when, a girl of fifteen, she had died with her father, down by the sea-girt shore of Ireland where all her life had been spent. Her thoughts did not linger upon the circumstances of her father's death, a quarrel between two brothers and the blow which had accidentally been dealt by the hand of Cain, she was thinking only of those months spent in hiding, in fleeing from land to land, undressed now what had brought that desperate, hunted look to the face which, in childhood, never left them.

She aroused herself, rose and turned away from the window.

"Ah, surely I am safe here," she murmured. "He will not dared me here."

The words had hardly left her lips when the door opened and Pedro, livid with restraining was quickly caused, a man stepped across the threshold.

The woman staggered back, one hand pulsating across her colorless brow.

"Pedro!"

Slowly he moved towards her. Her eyes never left his face, which was the face that had never ceased to haunt her during that lone year.

"Traitoress! Damnable traitoress!" he muttered, in a strange voice. His strong fingers sought her white, slim throat.

Some hours later they found her, with the dented fingers of a man's hands there about her throat.

About a month later Pedro walked quietly into the hall where the bandits were assembled.

"Comrades," he said, "the woman who betrayed us is dead."

* * *

A year after the death of her father Marguerite, with the shadow gone from her brow and the roses again back in her cheeks again, became the wife of the Marquis St. Maur. And upon the day she became her a wife Marguerite, through her tears, looked for the last time upon the face of Armande de Kercheval, her brother.

In a gray monastery, in the south of France, remote from the busy haunts of men, there is a young monk with a pale face, a great beauty and eyes of unutterable sadness. He is called Brother Ignace, and so long as he is there he will never again hear the sound of a woman's voice nor look again upon woman's beauty.

(The end.)

It Beats the Band.

The newest and most inspiring piece of Sheet Music is arranged for piano, is "The Pioneer Limited March," composed by Capt. Frederick Plummer, Bandmaster United States Band, published by S. Brainard's Sons Co., Chicago, Ill., distributed only by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. Enclose 25 cents and address, Geo. H. Heafford, General Passenger Agent, 559 Old Colony Building, Chicago, Ill.

Ships and Lightning.

The reason why ships are not struck by lightning is attributed to the general use which is now made of wire rope for rigging purposes, as well as to the fact that the hulls of vessels usually consist mainly of iron or steel. Thus the whole ship forms a mass of which the electricity is led away, by an excellent and continuous conductor, into the ocean before it has time to do any serious damage.

A Paradox.

The things that we cannot afford
Are oft, beyond a doubt,
The very blooming things we can't Afford to be without.

FREE GIFT FOR MEN

Geo. B. Wright Was Restored to Health and Makes a Generous Offer to Every Sufferer From Lost Manhood.

Mr. George B. Wright is a well-known citizen of Marshall, Mich., who was permanently cured of lost manhood and nervous debility after declining health for years. He now devotes his life to helping other men who suffer as he once suffered. Mr. Wright desires to send Free the medical prescription that effected a cure in his case to every reader of the Chicago Ledger, who is suffering today. All who will write him a letter asking for a copy of the prescription are promised it by return mail free of any charge.

Mr. Wright says: "No one can appreciate the horrors of a ruined constitution, who has not suffered them. No one can help such sufferers except he knows a cure and has himself been restored to full manhood. My case was given up by doctors as hopeless. I suffered for years and saw my physical powers go from me, as the result of insidious disease, until I was reduced to a condition where I was up to date unable to do anything. It seems that his ten years' suffering, both mentally and physically, was turned to unbounded joy in a single night, and he was literally made a strong man by the use of the prescription. In this one year I have lived a hundred years in agony. I have suffered all that mortal can suffer. Ah, heaven! In this one year I have lived a hundred years in agony. I have never known a moment's peace. Oh, the intolerable anguish of living always a hundred lives!"

She rested her aching brow on her hand and her thoughts went back ten years, when, a girl of fifteen, she had died with her father, down by the sea-girt shore of Ireland where all her life had been spent. Her thoughts did not linger upon the circumstances of her father's death, a quarrel between two brothers and the blow which had accidentally been dealt by the hand of Cain, she was thinking only of those months spent in hiding, in fleeing from land to land, undressed now what had brought that desperate, hunted look to the face which, in childhood, never left them.

She aroused herself, rose and turned away from the window.

"Ah, surely I am safe here," she murmured. "He will not dared me here."

The words had hardly left her lips when the door opened and Pedro, livid with restraining was quickly caused, a man stepped across the threshold.

The woman staggered back, one hand pulsating across her colorless brow.

"Pedro!"

Slowly he moved towards her. Her eyes never left his face, which was the face that had never ceased to haunt her during that lone year.

"Traitoress! Damnable traitoress!" he muttered, in a strange voice. His strong fingers sought her white, slim throat.

Some hours later they found her, with the dented fingers of a man's hands there about her throat.

About a month later Pedro walked quietly into the hall where the bandits were assembled.

"Comrades," he said, "the woman who

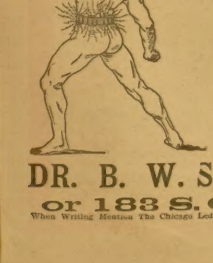
Mr. Wright's prescription. Many people wonder how he can afford to send this prescription free, but it costs him but little to do so, and he feels a philanthropic interest in giving weak men an opportunity to cure themselves.

Write today to G. B. Wright, music dealer, Box 1209, Marshall, Mich., for his free prescription, and he promises it will be promptly sent by return mail, in plain sealed wrapper.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MEN MADE STRONG--NO DRUGS



A child may inherit a parent's strength, it may inherit his weakness. There is food for sober thought expressed in that sentence. Strength is a natural condition, weakness the reverse. For thirty years I have been showing men the road to strength. I have demonstrated a natural remedy to be the true remedy. I have made a specialty of nervous and organic weaknesses in men as a result of youthful errors or later excesses, such as Drains, Impotency, Lame Back, Varicocele, &c. I could not give you as good service as some doctors in fevers, or pneumonia, or smallpox. I am no authority on obstetrics or tuberculosis. Of course I studied these subjects, but this is a day of specialties. I know the nervous and glandular system of men. That's my strong card. I treat weak men, and weak men only. In the beginning, let me say I use no drugs. When I take your money I want to give value in return. I couldn't do that and give you drugs for weakness. They stimulate. They give "quick results," but you fall back into a worse condition. You may be weak, you have robbed Nature by abusing her laws, but she is magnanimous, she is forgiving. I will ask her to give that strength back to you. I am the inventor of an appliance which puts in your hands a means of using Nature's great restorer, Electricity. It is the famous Dr. Sanden Electric Belt, with attachment for men. Mind what I say. In ten years from date the Belt will be the recognized form of Electric Belt. It was to fill a want. You put it on when you go to bed, take it off next morning. That's what does the work. Seven hours of Nature's strengthener each day for ninety days, with a little sound advice to suit your case. That is all. That will will bring you back to strength.

FREE BOOK. If in or near these cities call, consult and examine free of charge, or if at a distance write for "Three Classes of Men," which explains all. Sent in plain sealed envelope. All correspondence given faithful attention.

DR. B. W. SANDEN, 826 Broadway, New York, N. Y., or 183 S. CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

CONSTIPATION

"I have gone 14 days at a time without a movement of the bowels, not being able to move them except by using hot water injections. Chronic constipation for seven years placed me in this terrible condition; during that time I did everything I heard of but never found any relief; such was my case until I began using CASCARETS. I now have from one to three passages a day, and I was rich I would give $100.00 for each movement; it is such a relief. AUGUST L. HUOT, 1090 Russell St., Detroit, Mich.

CANDY CATHARTIC

Cascarets

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

REGULATE THE LIVER

Pleasant. Palatable. Potent. Taste Good. Do Good. Never Sicken, Weaken, or Gripe. 10c. 25c. 50c.

CURE CONSTIPATION,

Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago, Montreal, New York. 326

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FREE Ten Trade Notes, important to Farmers. Address The HARTFORD COMPANY, 319 Main Block, Chicago, Illinois

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

PATENTS Procured or No Fee. BOOK FREE. Highest references. Best results. Washington, D.C.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

C. S. A. MONEY Circulars FREE. Address C. S. A., 1 Chevy, Box 1, Detroit, Mich.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

DRUNKENNESS Liquor habit cured at home, with or without the knowledge of the patient. Book of particulars sent free. Correspondence confidential. Particulars sealed. ROYAL CHEMICAL CO., Lisbon, O.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FREE Send to Edgar Tate & Co., 461 Broadway, New York, for the most profitable advertising trade book on investment ever published.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FEET SWEAT? Painless cure or money refunded. Send $1.00. Highest Credentials. Electro Chemical Co., 237 Old Fellows Temple, Philadelphia.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

PRETTY and respectable girls want to marry; list of 100 descriptions and testimonials and 5 cabi. photos of any members for 10 cents. HEAD & HAND, Kansas City, Mo.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY to invest $200 or more, profitably. Particulars confidential. Address, Box 1000, Times Office. E. RUPERT, 128 Broadway, New York.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger

LADIES To Do Plain Sewing at home, $5.50 per week; no canvassing. Any worker wanted. Enclose self-addressed stamped envelope for full particulars. N. W. RUTTER & CO., Dept. 190, Philadelphia, Pa.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

I TELL FORTUNES 10 Test Questions answered, Horoscope, gives future, Dream Book, Lucky Numbers, Charm, Love Powder, Secret Art, hair tonic & receipt $1.00. Astrologer, Box 5, Fredonia, N. Y.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

ROOS AND DIPHEROLES For locating lost Treasures, Gold and Silver. Circulars FREE. Address R. C. STUPFER, H 18, Harrisburg, Pa.

Mention the Chicago Ledger.

BOYS' Paper Free. If you will send us the names of five of the brightest boys between 14 and 18 years of age, giving their address, we will send you a copy of THE STAR for 3 months free. Be careful to send the names of boys that like to read. 1000 BOYS PAPER. Address at once with name. THE STAR, Box 28, Oak Park, Illinois

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

"PERSONAL"

Any lady or gentleman wishing to correspond with the opposite sex for fun, pastime, improvement or marriage, should write at once to us. We have a large list of persons wishing to correspond. We introduce you by mail. Many pleasant flirtations, warm friendships, many marriages are arranged through us. Everything strictly confidential. Don't refer to this ad. Write with stamp for reply.

Personal Correspondence Club, Chicago, Ill

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

MENDING TISSUE The WONDER of the Age. No sewing or darning. Instantly clothing, silk, satin, cotton goods, ribbons, fabrics or all kinds, kid gloves, gossamers, umbrellas, carpets, stockings, etc. 10c. Package, postpaid, 15 cents; 2 packages 25 cents. Address, Penn Publishing Co., Parmanton, Pa. 3

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

Women Made BEAUTIFUL by VENTO. Develops the bust 5 inches, fills all hollows, gives rich color and beauty to the neck, arms and cheeks to match. Every woman can have a beautiful form and complexion. Sent by mail, sealed, for 50 cents. Book free. Call personally or address, VENTO, Boston, Mass.

AUBURN MEDICINE CO., 8 and 10 State St., Chicago, Ill.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

$3.98 GENTS OR LADIES SIZE

Genuine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set, hunting case, solid silver and nickel, open face or hunting case as desired, guaranteed a perfect timekeeper, and each watch in a separate box. Sent C.O.D. to any address for $3.98 and express charges. Examination allowed. Send for free catalogue containing hundreds of other bargains in watches, diamonds, jewelry, etc. Mention this paper. Address CHICAGO WATCH AND DIAMOND CO., 92 State St., Chicago, Ill.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

THE PASSING SHOW.

School Savings Banks.

Mr. J. H. Thiry of Long Island City, who introduced the system of public school savings banks into the United States, has published a pamphlet in which he enters into the philosophy and importance of educating children in thought and details results obtained on this continent and in Europe. He urges that the first and greatest object of the school savings bank is its educational value, and the number of depositors is preferable to the large figure of deposits, or in other words, a multiplication of accounts rather than volume of money. School banks should be encouraged, because they will check extravagance, will encourage the children in habits of thrift. They also help to raise the standard of morality.

In 1834 an unpretentious school master of a small city in France was the originator of the idea, which is yet in practice in that same school in the city of Le Man. Today that one school has about 900,000 adherents in Europe. In America the system was introduced in Long Island City, N. Y., March 16, 1885. The result has proved it equal to every expectation. It has come to stay, to grow and to occupy a well deserved place in the program of school work. During an empty stomach—an insult to the digestive organs as brutal as could be offered them, and for three hours these poor structures are stuffed with many kinds of alcoholic mixtures until in the early morning hours they are at last allowed some chance to repair their injuries. But what an idea of nutrition and of life it all presupposes! If a visitor from some other planet should come among us and should stumble on our fashionable drinking habits he would surely be long in fathoming the mystery of why otherwise sensible and honest men should make themselves such slaves to the drink fiend. And what the result of it is we all see and know. The reliance upon alcohol once established in youth, the tyranny becomes all the more furious in later years.

The Crime of the Century.

It has taken a stupendous amount of red tape and circumlocution, but the proofs are before the country at last. We know now beyond peradventure that rascally meat contractors poisoned the men who went with the flag. The country has official proof that the refuse of the great packing houses of Chicago was crammed into tins and sold to the United States of America as sustenance for men who had given the supreme test of patriotism.

When the vile scraps were canned, it was known they would be fed to men on the march, on guard at the danger line, and in the trenches of the firing line. The rascals who sold the repulsive refuse were guilty of murder and treason. If justice were done, they would be shot, and their ill-gotten millions confiscated to pay pensions to the dependent relatives of their victims.

A Dangerous Custom.

If one goes to a dinner party of three or a banquet of 300, says the Philadelphia Medical Journal, the first duty is held to be to pour a highly alcoholic "cocktail" into Leader of the Band—Smith, I want you to play cornet tonight.

Smith—I wouldn't go out in this storm for a thousand dollars.
Leader—But they pay $5 each.
Smith—Oh, that's different.

twelve years at Long Island City, N. Y., up until 1897, the 7,609 pupils there enrolled saved $73,628.62, of which $26,252.09 was still on deposit. Since 1885, sixty-three other cities in six states of the union, embracing 200 schools and 1,572 teachers, have adopted the system, and up until March 31, 1897, out of $4,700 saved in these schools, $2,235 had become depositors to the total amount of $451,211.37. Of this amount deposited $282,- 958.28 had been checked out, leaving $168,- 252.14 still on deposit to the credit of the school children.

That Deep Hole.

It is reported that the deepest ocean sounding yet recorded has been made by the British steamer Penguin, during a cruise in the Pacific. A depth of 4,703 fathoms was found between Auckland and the Tongan Archipelago. The Penguin also investigated the recent disappearance of Falcon island, which was formed during a volcanic eruption in 1885, and vanished in September last year, and it was found that the island had sunk three fathoms below the surface.

Largest University in the World.

A university in Cairo is said to have 11,000 students, more than attend any other two universities in the world.

Shrinking Fast.

If Spain keeps up her present pace and direction she will soon be down to a size suitable to a boy King.

Kipling's Place in Literature.

Rudyard Kipling now seems to be so far along on the way to recovery that the English-speaking world may be congratulated upon a narrow escape from an irreparable loss. By general consent Kipling may be said to possess more of that mysterious fire called genius than any other living writer. Since Stevenson's death Kipling has been quite universally accorded the foremost place in the ranks of modern authorship. To compare him with Stevenson would be futile, for the work of the two men is different, and Kipling has scarcely more than begun his career, while Stevenson had at least reached his prime. Kipling's greatest work is undoubtedly still before him, and this is why his death would have been so poignant a blow to the literature of this epoch.

CURE FITS

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.

Prof. W. H. PEEKE, P.D., 4 Cedar St., N.Y.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

STARK Have 6 TASTE. Reward. Fruit Book Free STARK BRO'S. Stark, Mo. We PAY FREIGHT

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

$2.45 buys a MAPLE and Baby Carriage 12 page Catalogue Free. Send for it and visit us at 56 page Catalogue Free. Send for it and visit us at our factory and warerooms if in reference. Address VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., Dept. H 99, 259 and 261 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

140 50th Prize Cards, Lion, Transparent, Escort, Hidden Name, Floral, Fringed, Gilt Edge, Chromo, Etc., 10c. 40 Agents' Outfit, 10c. 45 Games, 10c. 1000 Stamps, 10c. 1000 Scrap Pictures, 10c. All for 50 cents. GILT EDGE CARD CO., Cadiz, Ohio.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

OPIUM and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. C. Hoffman, Dept. A, Lebanon, Ohio.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

RUPTURE Entire Cure at home, at a small cost. No operation, no pain, no detention from work. Full report of Rupture and Book on Rupture. A complete, radical cure in all cases of young men, through to middle age. Write to-day to DR. W. S. RICE, BOX L, Adams, New York

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

DON'T BUY AN INCUBATOR and pay for it before giving it a trial. We will ship you our VAN CELLS INCUBATOR on these conditions. This is an entirely new principle. It's a success and works as easy as a sewing machine. Write for our free catalogue. Van Cells Incubator Co. 7 Adams St. Delaware City, Del.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

$3.00 A $35 WATCH for only $3.00. We have just bought 5000 hunting case, open face, stem wind and set, correct time keeper, guaranteed for 25 years for only $3.00. Cut this out and send to us with your name and address, we will send the watch C.O.D. to your express office; you examine it then and if you find it as represented and worth $35.00 in any jewelry store in the country, pay the express agent $3.00 and it is yours, remember we pay ex. U. S. Exch. & Co., 315 E. 63d St., Chicago, Ill.

MORPHINE AND OPIUM FREE TRIAL Treatment sent by express. Address MORPHINE OPIUM or other DRUG HABIT. A sure cure. Permanent Home Cure. Correspondence Confidentially Invited. Enclose Stamp. Confidential. ST. PAUL ASSOCIATION, 48 VAN BUREN ST., CHICAGO

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

INGERSOLL PRINTERS, 10c. Set of Rubber Type, with Holder, Pad and Ink, 10c. Type Wheel Printing Press, Prints Name, Date and Motto, 10c. Type Wheel Printing Press, Prints 3 lines and 2 Line Rubber Type, 25c. Send for Catalogue of Novelties. INGERSOLL & PROCTER, Dept. 7, 37 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

Sample COLLAR OR PAIR OF CUFFS

Stylish, convenient, economical. Made of fine cloth, finished in fine stitch and exactly resemble linen goods. No Laundry Work required. Collar stand. Ten Collars or five pairs of Cuffs, 25cts By mail, 30cts. Send 5 cts. in stamps for sample collar or pair of cuffs, 3 Name size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. Z, Boston, Mass.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

COST NOTHING TO EXAMINE.

Send for our Catalogue of Sewing Machines, Bicycles, Guns, Revolvers, Watches, Sporting Goods, Musical Instruments, Etc. Our Catalogue is the most complete and interesting ever published. Contains 1000 illustrations, and tells all about the best goods at the lowest prices. Sent free. Write for it.

WORLD

$2.48.

We ask no money until you see the goods. Then we have to tell you and your friends about them. Then if you like, and America can teach us no points, write to us for anything you want, we will send you anything in our line absolutely free. Write to-day. Mention this paper. Established 1896. Columbia Wholesale Merchandise Co., 242 Dearborn St., Chicago.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.